The COINTELPRO operators targeted multiple groups at once and encouraged splintering of these groups from within. In letter-writing campaigns (wherein false letters were sent on behalf of members of parties), the FBI ensured that groups would not unite in their causes. For instance, they launched a campaign specifically to alienate the Black Panther Party from the Mau Maus, Young Lords, Young Patriots and SDS. These racially diverse groups had been building alliances, in part due to charismatic leaders, such as Fred Hampton and his attempts to create a "Rainbow Coalition". The FBI was concerned with ensuring that groups could not gain traction through unity, specifically across racial lines. One of the main ways of targeting these groups was to arouse suspicion between the different parties and causes. In this way the bureau took on a divide-and-conquer offensive.[51]

The COINTELPRO documents show numerous cases of the FBI's intentions to prevent and disrupt protests against the Vietnam War. Many techniques were used to accomplish this task. "These included promoting splits among antiwar forces, encouraging red-baiting of socialists, and pushing violent confrontations as an alternative to massive, peaceful demonstrations." One 1966 COINTELPRO operation tried to redirect the Socialist Workers Party from their pledge of support for the antiwar movement.[67]

The FBI has said that it no longer undertakes COINTELPRO or COINTELPRO-like operations. However, critics have claimed that agency programs in the spirit of COINTELPRO targeted groups such as the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador,[68] the American Indian Movement,[69][70] Earth First!, [71] and the anti-globalization movement.[72]

Methods

Body of Fred Hampton, national spokesman for the Black Panther Party, who was assassinated[73][74] by members of the Chicago Police Department, with the raid itself being a COINTELPRO operation, although there is no proof the assassination itself was[19][75]

According to attorney Brian Glick in his book War at Home, the FBI used five main methods during COINTELPRO:

Infiltration: Agents and informers did not merely spy on political activists. Their main purpose was to discredit, disrupt and negatively redirect action. Their very presence served to undermine trust and scare off potential supporters. The FBI and police exploited this fear to smear genuine activists as agents.

Psychological warfare: The FBI and police used a myriad of "dirty tricks" to undermine movements. They planted false media stories and published bogus leaflets and other publications in the name of targeted groups. They forged correspondence, sent anonymous letters, and made anonymous telephone calls. They spread misinformation about meetings and events, set up pseudo movement groups run by government agents, and manipulated or strong-armed parents, employers, landlords, school officials, and others to cause trouble for activists. They used bad-jacketing to create suspicion about targeted activists, sometimes with lethal consequences.[76]

Harassment via the legal system: The FBI and police abused the legal system to harass dissidents and make them appear to be criminals. Officers of the law gave perjured testimony and presented fabricated evidence as a pretext for false arrests and wrongful imprisonment. They discriminatorily enforced tax laws and other government regulations and used conspicuous surveillance, "investigative" interviews, and grand jury subpoenas in an effort to intimidate activists and silence their supporters.[75][77]

Illegal force: The FBI conspired with local police departments to threaten dissidents; to conduct illegal break-ins in order to search dissident homes; and to commit vandalism, assaults, beatings and assassinations.[75] The objective was to frighten or eliminate dissidents and disrupt their movements.

Undermine public opinion: One of the primary ways the FBI targeted organizations was by challenging their reputations in the community and denying them a platform to gain legitimacy. Hoover specifically designed programs to block leaders from "spreading their philosophy publicly or through the communications media". Furthermore, the organization created and controlled negative media meant to undermine black power organizations. For instance, they oversaw the creation of "documentaries" skillfully edited to paint the Black Panther Party as aggressive, and false newspapers that spread misinformation about party members. The ability of the FBI to create distrust within and between revolutionary organizations tainted their public image and weakened chances at unity and public support.[51]

The FBI specifically developed tactics intended to heighten tension and hostility between various factions in the black power movement, for example between the Black Panthers and the US Organization. For instance, the FBI sent a fake letter to the US Organization exposing a supposed Black Panther plot to murder the head of the US Organization, Ron Karenga. They then intensified this by spreading falsely attributed cartoons in the black communities pitting the Black Panther Party against the US Organization.[51] This resulted in numerous deaths, among which were San Diego Black Panther Party members John Huggins, Bunchy Carter and Sylvester Bell.[75] Another example of the FBI's anonymous letter writing campaign is how they turned the Blackstone Rangers head, Jeff Fort, against former ally Fred Hampton, by stating that Hampton had a hit on Fort.[51] They also were instrumental in developing the rift between Black Panther Party leaders Eldridge Cleaver and Huey Newton, as executed through false letters inciting the two leaders of the Black Panther Party.[51] The FBI also created fake organizations, such as the Ad Hoc Committee for a Marxist-Leninist Party, to spur division, derail unification efforts between socialist organizations, and place informants with falsified "radical" backgrounds.[78]

Dhoruba Bin Wahad, a former Black Panther, reflects on how these tactics made him feel, saying he had a combat mentality and felt like he was at war with the government. When asked about why he thinks the Black Panthers were targeted he said,

In the United States, the equivalent of the military was the local police. During the early sixties, at the height of the civil rights movement, and the human rights movement, the police in the United States became increasingly militaristic. They began to train out of military bases in the United States. The Law Enforcement Assistance Act supplied local police with military technology, everything from assault rifles to army personnel carriers. In his opinion, the Counterintelligence Program went hand-in-hand with the militarization of the police in the Black community, with the militarization of police in America.[79]

The FBI also conspired with the police departments of many U.S. cities (San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland, Philadelphia, Chicago) to encourage repeated raids on Black Panther homes—often with little or no evidence of violations of federal, state, or local laws—which resulted in the police killing many members of the Black Panther Party, most notably Chicago Black Panther Party Chairman Fred Hampton on December 4, 1969. Whether or not the FBI sanctioned his killing remains unproven.[19][75][80] Before the death of Hampton, long-term infiltrator, William O'Neal, shared floor plans of his apartment with the COINTELPRO team. He then gave Hampton a dose of secobarbital that rendered Hampton unconscious during the raid on his home.[51]

In order to eliminate black militant leaders whom they considered dangerous, the FBI is believed to have worked with local police departments to target specific individuals,[81] accuse them of crimes they did not commit, suppress exculpatory evidence and falsely incarcerate them. Elmer "Geronimo" Pratt, a Black Panther Party leader, was incarcerated for 27 years before a California Superior Court vacated his murder conviction, ultimately freeing him. Appearing before the court, an FBI agent testified that he believed Pratt had been framed, because both the FBI and the Los Angeles Police Department knew he had not been in the area at the time the murder occurred.[82][83]

groups and their members.[86]

In 1969 the FBI special agent in San Francisco wrote Hoover that his investigation of the Black Panther Party had concluded that in his city, at least, the Panthers were primarily engaged in feeding breakfast to children. Hoover fired back a memo implying the agent's career goals would be directly affected by his supplying evidence to support Hoover's view that the Black Panther Party was "a violence-prone organization seeking to overthrow the Government by revolutionary means".[87]

Hoover supported using false claims to attack his political enemies. In one memo he wrote: "Purpose of counterintelligence action is to disrupt the Black Panther Party and it is immaterial whether facts exist to substantiate the charge."[88]

Viola's family endured Hoover's claiming that cuts on her arm from the car's shattered window indicated "recent drug use" and that her proximity to Moton resembled "a necking party", despite an autopsy revealing no traces of drugs in her system and indicating she hadn't had sex recently before her death.

—On the FBI's targeting of Viola Liuzzo[89]

In one particularly controversial 1965 incident, white civil rights worker Viola Liuzzo was murdered by Ku Klux Klansmen, who gave chase and fired shots into her car after noticing that her passenger was a young black man; one of the Klansmen was Gary Thomas Rowe, an acknowledged FBI informant.[90][91] The FBI spread rumors that Liuzzo was a member of the Communist Party and had abandoned her children to have sexual relationships with African Americans involved in the civil rights movement.[92][93] FBI records show that J. Edgar Hoover personally communicated these insinuations to President Johnson.[94][95] Despite this, three Klansmen would be convicted in a federal trial for Liuzzo's murder in December 1965.[96]

FBI informant Rowe has also been implicated in some of the most violent crimes of the 1960s civil rights era, including attacks on the Freedom Riders and the 1963 Birmingham, Alabama 16th Street Baptist Church bombing.[90]

The ACLU has claimed the FBI supported an extreme right-wing group of former Minutemen, transforming it into a group called the Secret Army Organization that targeted groups, activists, and leaders involved in the Anti-War Movement, using both intimidation and violent acts.[97][98][99][100]

Hoover ordered preemptive action "to pinpoint potential troublemakers and neutralize them before they exercise their potential for violence".[25]

Illegal surveillance

The final report of the Church Committee concluded:

Too many people have been spied upon by too many Government agencies and too much information has been illegally collected. The Government has often undertaken the secret surveillance of citizens on the basis of their political beliefs, even when those beliefs posed no threat of violence or illegal acts on behalf of a hostile foreign power. The Government, operating primarily through secret and biased informants, but also using other intrusive techniques, such as wiretaps, microphone "bugs", surreptitious mail opening, and break-ins, has swept in vast amounts of information about the personal lives, views, and associations of American citizens. Investigations of groups deemed potentially dangerous—and even of groups suspected of associating with potentially dangerous organizations—have continued for decades, despite the fact that those groups did not engage in unlawful activity.

Groups and individuals have been assaulted, repressed, harassed and disrupted because of their political views, social beliefs and their lifestyles. Investigations have been based upon vague standards whose breadth made excessive collection inevitable. Unsavory, harmful and vicious tactics have been employed—including anonymous attempts to break up marriages, disrupt meetings, ostracize persons from their professions, and provoke target groups into rivalries that might result in deaths. Intelligence agencies have served the political and personal objectives of presidents and other high officials. While the agencies often committed excesses in response to pressure from high officials in the Executive branch and Congress, they also occasionally initiated improper activities and then concealed them from officials whom they had a duty to inform.

Governmental officials—including those whose principal duty is to enforce the law—have violated or ignored the law over long periods of time and have advocated and defended their right to break the law.

The Constitutional system of checks and balances has not adequately controlled intelligence activities. Until recently the Executive branch has neither delineated the scope of permissible activities nor established procedures for supervising intelligence agencies. Congress has failed to exercise sufficient oversight, seldom questioning the use to which its appropriations were being put. Most domestic intelligence issues have not reached the courts, and in those cases when they have reached the courts, the judiciary has been reluctant to grapple with them.[101][102]

Later similar operations

While COINTELPRO was officially terminated in April 1971, domestic espionage continued.[103][104][105] Between 1972 and 1974, it is documented that the Bureau planted over 500 bugs without a warrant and opened over 2,000 pieces of personal mail. More recent targets of covert action include the American Indian Movement (AIM), Earth First!, and Committees in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador.[106] Documents released under the FOIA show that the FBI tracked the late David Halberstam—a Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist and author—for more than two decades.[107] "Counterterrorism" guidelines implemented during the Reagan administration have been described as allowing a return to COINTELPRO tactics.[108] Some radical groups accuse factional opponents of being FBI informants or assume the FBI is infiltrating the movement.[109] COINTELPRO survivor Filiberto Ojeda Rios was killed by the FBI's hostage rescue team in 2005,[110] his death described by a United Nations special committee as an assassination.[111]

Environmentalism Eric McDavid, convicted on arson charges, was released after documents emerged demonstrating that the FBI informant in his Earth Liberation Front group provided crucial leadership, information, and material without which the crime could not have been committed,[112] repeating the same pattern of behavior of COINTELPRO.[113] It has been claimed these sorts of practices have become widespread in FBI "counter-terrorism" cases targeting Muslims in the 2009 Bronx terrorism plot and others.[114][115][116][117]

Authors, such as Ward Churchill, Rex Weyler, and Peter Matthiessen allege that the federal government intended to acquire uranium deposits on the Lakota tribe's reservation land, and that this motivated a larger government conspiracy against AIM activists on the Pine Ridge reservation.[69][70][118][119][120] Others believe COINTELPRO continues and similar actions are being taken against activist groups.[120][121][122] Caroline Woidat says that, with respect to Native Americans, COINTELPRO should be understood within a historical context in which "Native Americans have been viewed and have viewed the world themselves through the lens of conspiracy theory." [120] Other authors argue that while some conspiracy theories related to COINTELPRO are unfounded, the issue of ongoing government surveillance and repression is real.[123][124]

FBI Agent Richard G. Held is known to have increased FBI support for the Guardians of the Oglala Nation (GOON) squads, who were a private paramilitary group established in 1972 by the elected tribal chairman, Dick Wilson, under authority of the Oglala Sioux. AIM accused GOONS of involvement in 300 assaults and 64 homicides of political opponents. Despite this, The Bureau rarely investigated them and instead used its resources overwhelmingly to prosecute AIM.[125] In 2000, the FBI released a report regarding these alleged unsolved violent deaths on Pine Ridge reservation and accounted for most of the deaths and disputed the claims of unsolved murders. The report stated that only four deaths were unsolved and that some deaths were not murders.[126][127]

A lawsuit filed by Dhoruba bin-Wahad, a former member of the Black Panther Party, revealed the existence of multiple programs similar to COINTELPRO including "Newkill" (New York Police Killings), Chesrob (a program focused on Panther Assata Shakur), and PRISACTS (The Prison Activists Surveillance Program), a program that focused on "neutralizing" political activists who were already in prison, many of whom (like bin-Wahad) had been targeted by COINTELPRO.[128][129]

In April 2018, the Atlanta Black Star characterized the FBI as still engaging in COINTELPRO behavior by surveilling the Black Lives Matter movement. Internal documents dated as late as 2017 showed that the FBI had surveilled the movement.[130] In 2014, the FBI tracked a Black Lives Matter activist using surveillance tactics which The Intercept found "reminiscent of a rich American history of targeting black Americans," including COINTELPRO.[131] This practice, along with the imprisonment of black activists for their views, has been associated with the new FBI designation of "Black Identity Extremists".[132][133]

Defending Rights & Dissent, a civil liberties group, cataloged known instances of First Amendment abuses and political surveillance by the FBI since 2010. The organization found that the FBI devoted disproportionate resources to spy on peaceful left-leaning civil society groups, including Occupy Wall Street, economic justice advocates, racial justice movements, environmentalists, Abolish ICE, and various anti-war movements.[134][135]

In December 2012, the FBI released redacted documents in response to a Freedom of Information Act request from the Partnership for Civil Justice Fund (PCJF). Mara Verheyden-Hilliard, the executive director of PCJF, said the documents showed that FBI counterterrorism agents had monitored the Occupy movement from its inception in August 2011 and that the FBI acted improperly by collecting "information on people's free-speech actions" and entering it into "unregulated databases, a vast storehouse of information widely disseminated to a range of law-enforcement and, apparently, private entities" (see Domestic Security Alliance Council).[136] The FBI also communicated with the New York Stock Exchange, banks, private businesses and state and local police forces about the movement.[137] In 2014, the PCJF obtained an additional 4,000 pages of unclassified documents through a Freedom of Information Act request, showing "details of the scrutiny of the Occupy protests in 2011 and 2012 by law enforcement officers, federal officials, security contractors and others." [138]

In October 2020, Katie Reiter, chief of staff to Michigan state Senator Rosemary Bayer, had an FBI task force come to her house and aggressively question her about a draft bill she had recently discussed which would have limited the use of tear gas against protesters. Reiter had discussed the proposed ban on tear gas on a private 90-minute Zoom call with Bayer and a handful of other staffers. Reiter says the two officers refused to answer any questions about how they became aware of her private meeting. The Intercept reported about the incident: "Reiter said that the FBI's visit left her confused and fearful. 'It has impacted my sleep, it has caused me quite a bit of anxiety,' she said. 'And it has certainly impacted how we talk. I try not to let it, I'll just be like, 'No, we're going to talk about this.' But it's in my mind all the time.'" A spokesperson for the FBI declined to comment on the record, as did a spokesperson for Zoom.[139]

Weiner 2012, p. 272: "Some 1,500 army intelligence officers in civilian clothing undertook the surveillance of some 100,000 American citizens. Army intelligence shared all their reports over the next three years. The CIA tracked antiwar leaders and black militants who traveled overseas, and it reported back to the FBI. The FBI, in turn, shared thousands of selected files on Americans with army intelligence and the CIA. All three intelligence services sent the names of Americans to the National Security Agency for inclusion on a global watch list; the NSA relayed back to the FBI hundreds of transcripts of intercepted telephone calls to and from suspect Americans."

McKnight 1998, pp. 26–28: "By March the Hoover Bureau's campaign against King was virtually on a total war footing. In a March 21 'urgent' teletype, Hoover urged all field offices involved in the POCAM project to exploit every tactic in the bureau's arsenal of covert political warfare to bring down King and the SCLC."

More recent controversies have focused on the adequacy of recent restrictions on the Bureau's domestic intelligence operations. Disclosures of the 1970s that FBI agents continued to conduct break-ins, and of the 1980s that the FBI targeted CISPES, again brought forth accusations of FBI abuses of power—and raised questions of whether reforms of the 1970s had successfully exorcised the ghost of FBI Director Hoover.

This article is about the Stasi psychological warfare technique. For the Nazi Germany crime of undermining the war effort, see Wehrkraftzersetzung.

The writer Jürgen Fuchs was targeted with Zersetzung methods. He described them as an 'assault on the human soul'.<sup>[1]</sup> He died of a rare form of leukemia which he believed was caused by the Stasi's use of weaponised X-ray devices on him.<sup>[2]</sup>

Zersetzung (pronounced [ˈt͡sɛʁˌzɛʦʊŋ] ⓘ, German for "decomposition" and "disruption") is a psychological warfare technique first used by the Ministry for State Security (Stasi) to repress political opponents in East Germany during the 1970s and 1980s. Zersetzung served to combat alleged and actual dissidents through covert means, using secret methods of abusive control and psychological manipulation to prevent anti-government activities. Among the defining features of it was the widespread use of counterespionage methods as a means of repression.<sup>[3]</sup> People were commonly targeted on a pre-emptive and preventive basis, to limit or stop activities of political dissent and cultural incorrectness that they may have gone on to perform, and not on the basis of crimes they had actually committed. Zersetzung methods were designed to break down, undermine, and paralyze people behind "a facade of social normality"<sup>[4]</sup> in a form of "silent repression".<sup>[4]</sup>

Erich Honecker's succession to Walter Ulbricht as First Secretary of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany (SED) in May 1971 saw an evolution of "operational procedures" (Operative Vorgänge) conducted by Stasi away from the overt terror of the Ulbricht era towards what came to be known as Zersetzung ("Anwendung von Maßnahmen der Zersetzung"), which was formalized by Directive No. 1/76 on the Development and Revision of Operational Procedures in January 1976.[5] The Stasi used operational psychology and its extensive network of between 170,000[6] and over 500,000[7][8] informal collaborators (inoffizielle Mitarbeiter) to launch personalized psychological attacks against targets to damage their mental health and lower chances of a "hostile action" against the state.[9] Among the collaborators were youths as young as 14 years of age.[10]

The use of Zersetzung is well documented due to Stasi files published after the Berlin Wall fell. The exact number of victims is hard to ascertain due to the proliferation of other forms of abuse which people were also targeted with. The International Rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims states that there are between 300,000 and 500,000 victims of the Stasi's use of Zersetzung, direct physical torture and gross human rights violations.[11] Considering Zersetzung by itself, the historian Mike Dennis estimates that in the years 1985-88 there were between 4,500-5,000 'Operational Cases'[12] opened against different people each year.[13]

Special pensions for restitution have been created for Zersetzung victims.[14]

Definition

Directive No. 1/76 on the Development and Revision of Operational Procedures, which outlined the use of Zersetzung in the Ministry for State Security
The Ministry for State Security (German: Ministerium für Staatssicherheit, MfS), commonly known as the Stasi, was the main security service of the German Democratic Republic (East Germany or GDR), and defined Zersetzung in its 1985 dictionary of political operatives as ... a method of operation by the Ministry for State Security for an efficacious struggle against subversive activities, particularly in the treatment of operations. With Zersetzung one can influence hostile and negative individuals across different operational political activities, especially the hostile and negative aspects of their dispositions and beliefs, so these are abandoned and changed little by little, and, if applicable, the contradictions and differences between the hostile and negative forces would be laid open, exploited, and reinforced.

The goal of Zersetzung is the fragmentation, paralysis, disorganization, and isolation of the hostile and negative forces, in order to preventatively impede the hostile and negative activities, to largely restrict, or to totally avert them, and if applicable to prepare the ground for a political and ideological reestablishment.

Zersetzung is equally an immediate constitutive element of "operational procedures" and other preventive activities to impede hostile gatherings. The principal force employed to implement Zersetzung are the unofficial collaborators. Zersetzung presupposes information and significant proof of hostile activities planned, prepared, and accomplished as well as anchor points corresponding to measures of Zersetzung.

Zersetzung must be produced on the basis of a root cause analysis of the facts and the exact definition of a concrete goal. Zersetzung must be executed in a uniform and supervised manner; its results must be documented.

The political explosive force of Zersetzung heightens demands regarding the maintenance of secrecy.[15]

The term Zersetzung is generally translated into English as "decomposition", although it can be variously translated as "decay", "corrosion", "undermining", "biodegradation", or "dissolution". The term was first used in a prosecutorial context in Nazi Germany, namely as part of the term Wehrkraftzersetzung (or Zersetzung der Wehrkraft). In Western parlance, Zersetzung can be described as the active application of psychological destabilisation procedures by the State apparatus.

Context and goals

The Uprising of 1953 in East Germany was an early display of open political opposition to the Socialist Unity Party of Germany.

The German Democratic Republic (GDR) was established in October 1949 as a socialist state from the Soviet Zone of Occupation, and ruled by the Socialist Unity Party of Germany (SED). During its first decade of the GDR's existence, the SED under General Secretary Walter Ulbricht consolidated their rule by overtly combating political opposition, which it subdued primarily through the penal code by accusing them of incitement to war or of calls of boycott and processing them through the regular criminal judiciary.[16] In 1961, to counteract the GDR's practice of isolationism following the construction of the Berlin Wall, the judicial repression was gradually abandoned.[17] At the end of the 1960s, the GDR's desire for international recognition and rapprochement with the Federal Republic of Germany (West Germany) led to a commitment to adhere to the U.N. Charter.[citation needed]

On 3 May 1971, with the blessing of the USSR's leadership, Erich Honecker became First Secretary of the SED, replacing Ulbricht for an ostensible reason of poor health. Honecker sought to burnish the GDR's international reputation while fighting internal opposition by intensification of the Stasi's efforts to punish dissident behaviors without using the penal code.[18] The GDR signed the Basic Treaty, 1972 with West Germany to respect human rights, or at least announce its intention to do so, and the Helsinki Accords in 1975.[19][20][21] Consequently, the SED regime decided to reduce the number of political prisoners, which was compensated for by practising dissident repression without imprisonment or court judgements.[22][23]

British journalist Luke Harding, who had experienced treatment on the part of Russia's

FSB in Vladimir Putin's Russia that was similar to Zersetzung, writes in his book:

As applied by the Stasi, Zersetzung is a technique to subvert and undermine an opponent. The aim was to disrupt the target's private or family life so they are unable to continue their "hostile-negative" activities towards the state. Typically, the Stasi would use collaborators to garner details from a victim's private life. They would then devise a strategy to "disintegrate" the target's personal circumstances—their career, their relationship with their spouse, their reputation in the community. They would even seek to alienate them from their children. [...] The security service's goal was to use Zersetzung to "switch off" regime opponents. After months and even years of Zersetzung a victim's domestic problems grew so large, so debilitating, and so psychologically burdensome that they would lose the will to struggle against the East German state. Best of all, the Stasi's role in the victim's personal misfortunes remained tantalisingly hidden. The Stasi operations were carried out in complete operational secrecy. The service acted like an unseen and malevolent god, manipulating the destinies of its victims.

It was in the mid-1970 that Honecker's secret police began to employ these perfidious methods. At that moment the GDR was finally achieving international respectability. [...] Honecker's predecessor, Walter Ulbricht, was an old-fashioned Stalinist thug. He used open terror methods to subdue his post-war population: show trials, mass arrests, camps, torture and the secret police.

But two decades after east Germany had become a communist paradise of workers and peasants, most citizens were acquiescent. When a new group of dissidents began to protest against the regime, Honecker came to the conclusion that different tactics were needed. Mass terror was no longer appropriate and might damage the GDR's international reputation. A cleverer strategy was called for. [...] The most insidious aspect of Zersetzung is that its victims are almost invariably not believed.[24]

In practice

The Stasi used Zersetzung essentially as a means of psychological oppression and persecution.[25] Findings of operational psychology[26] were formulated into method at the Stasi's College of Law (Juristische Hochschule der Staatssicherheit, or JHS), and applied to political opponents in an effort to undermine their self-confidence and self-esteem. Operations were designed to intimidate and destabilise them by subjecting them to repeated disappointment, and to socially alienate them by interfering with and disrupting their relationships with others as in social undermining. The aim was to induce personal crises in victims, leaving them too unnerved and psychologically distressed to have the time and energy for anti-government activism.[27] The Stasi intentionally concealed their role as mastermind of the operations.[28][29] Author Jürgen Fuchs was a victim of Zersetzung and wrote about his experience, describing the Stasi's actions as "psychosocial crime", and "an assault on the human soul".[27]

Although its techniques had been established effectively by the late 1950s, Zersetzung was not rigorously defined until the mid-1970s, and only then began to be carried out in a systematic manner in the 1970s and 1980s.[30] It is difficult to determine how many people were targeted, since the sources have been deliberately and considerably redacted; it is known, however, that tactics varied in scope, and that a number of different departments implemented them. Overall there was a ratio of four or five authorised Zersetzung operators for each targeted group, and three for each individual.[31] Some sources indicate that around 5,000 people were "persistently victimised" by Zersetzung.[32] At the College of Legal Studies, the number of dissertations submitted on the subject of Zersetzung was in double figures.[33] It also had a comprehensive 50-page Zersetzung teaching manual, which included numerous examples of its practice.[34]

Units involved

Almost all Stasi departments were involved in Zersetzung operations, although first and foremost amongst these was the headquarters of the Stasi's directorate XX (Hauptabteilung XX) in Berlin, and its divisional offices in regional and municipal government. The function of the headquarters and Abteilung XXs was to maintain surveillance of religious communities; cultural and media establishments; alternative political parties; the GDR's many political establishment-affiliated mass social organisations; sport; and education and health services—effectively covering all aspects of civic life.[35] The Stasi made use of the means available to them within, and as a circumstance of, the GDR's closed social system. An established, politically motivated collaborative network (politisch-operatives Zusammenwirken, or POZW) provided them with extensive opportunities for interference in such situations as the sanctioning of professionals and students, expulsion from associations and sports clubs, and occasional arrests by the Volkspolizei[28] (the GDR's quasi-military national police). Refusal of permits for travel to socialist states, or denial of entry at Czechoslovak and Polish border crossings where no visa requirement existed, were also arranged. The various collaborators (Partner des operativen Zusammenwirkens) included branches of regional government, university and professional management, housing administrative bodies, the Sparkasse public savings bank, and in some cases head physicians.[36] The Stasi's Linie III (Observation), Abteilung 26 (Telephone and room surveillance), and M (Postal communications) departments provided essential background information for the designing of Zersetzung techniques, with Abteilung 32 procuring the required technology.[37]

The Stasi collaborated with the secret services of other Eastern Bloc countries to implement Zersetzung. One such example was the Polish secret services co-operating against branches of the Jehovah's Witnesses organisation in the early 1960s,[38] which would come to be known[39] as "innere Zersetzung"[40] (internal subversion).

Use against individuals

The Stasi applied Zersetzung before, while, after, or instead of incarcerating the targeted individual. The implementation of Zersetzung—euphemistically called Operativer Vorgang ("operational procedure")—generally did not aim to gather evidence against the target in order to initiate criminal proceedings. Rather, the Stasi considered Zersetzung as a separate measure to be used when official judiciary procedures were undesirable for political reasons, such as the international image of the GDR.[41][42] However, in certain cases, the Stasi did attempt to entrap individuals, as for example in the case of Wolf Biermann: The Stasi set him up with minors, hoping that they could then pursue criminal charges.[43] The crimes targeted for such entrapment were non-political, such as drug possession, trafficking, theft, financial fraud, and rape.[44]

“...the Stasi often used a method which was really diabolic. It was called Zersetzung, and it's described in another guideline. The word is difficult to translate because it means originally "biodegradation." But actually, it's a quite accurate description. The goal was to destroy secretly the self-confidence of people, for example by damaging their reputation, by organizing failures in their work, and by destroying their personal relationships. Considering this, East Germany was a very modern dictatorship. The Stasi didn't try to arrest every dissident. It preferred to paralyze them, and it could do so because it had access to so much personal information and to so many institutions.”
—Hubertus Knabe, German historian[45]

Directive 1/76 lists the following as tried and tested forms of Zersetzung, among others:

a systematic degradation of reputation, image, and prestige on the basis of true, verifiable and discrediting information together with untrue, credible, irrefutable, and thus also discrediting information; a systematic engineering of social and professional failures to undermine the self-confidence of individuals; ... engendering of doubts regarding future prospects; engendering of mistrust and mutual suspicion within groups ...; interrupting or impeding the mutual relations within a group in space or time ..., for example by ... assigning geographically distant workplaces.

—Directive No. 1/76 of January 1976 for the development of "operational procedures".[46]

Beginning with intelligence obtained by espionage, the Stasi established "sociograms" and "psychograms" which it applied for the psychological forms of Zersetzung. They exploited personal traits, such as homosexuality, as well as supposed character weaknesses of the targeted individual—for example a professional failure, negligence of parental duties, pornographic interests, divorce, alcoholism, dependence on medications, criminal tendencies, passion for a collection or a game, or contacts with circles of the extreme right—or even the veil of shame from the rumors poured out upon one's circle of acquaintances.[47][48] From the point of view of the Stasi, the measures were the most fruitful when they were applied in connection with a personality; all "schematism" had to be avoided.[47]

Tactics and methods employed under Zersetzung generally involved the disruption of the victim's private or family life. This often included psychological attacks, in a form of gaslighting. Other practices included property damage, sabotage of cars, purposely incorrect medical treatment, smear campaigns including sending falsified compromising photos or documents to the victim's family, denunciation, provocation, psychological warfare, psychological subversion, wiretapping, and bugging.[49]

Rudolf Bahro was persecuted by the Stasi using Zersetzung methods. Like other dissidents, he died of a case of cancer which is suspected to have been caused by weaponised X-ray devices.[50]

It has arisen in investigation, though not definitely established, that the Stasi may have used X-ray devices in a directed and weaponised manner to cause long-term health problems in its opponents.[51] That said, Rudolf Bahro, Gerulf Pannach, and Jürgen Fuchs, three important dissidents who had been imprisoned at the same time, died of cancer within an interval of two years.[50] A study by the Federal Commissioner for the Records of the State Security Service of the former GDR (Bundesbeauftragte für die Unterlagen des Staatssicherheitsdienstes der ehemaligen Deutschen Demokratischen Republik or BStU) has meanwhile rejected on the basis of extant documents such as fraudulent use of X-rays, and only mentions isolated and unintentional cases of the harmful use of sources of radiation, for example to mark documents.[52]

In the name of the target, the Stasi made little announcements, ordered products, and made emergency calls, to terrorize them.[53][54] To threaten or intimidate or cause psychoses the Stasi assured itself of access to the target's living quarters and left visible traces of its presence, by adding, removing, and modifying objects such as the socks in a drawer, or by altering the time that an alarm clock was set to go off.[55][44]

Use against groups and social relations

The Stasi manipulated relations of friendship, love, marriage, and family by anonymous letters, telegrams and telephone calls as well as compromising photos, often altered.[56] In this manner, parents and children were supposed to systematically become strangers to one another.[57] To provoke conflicts and extramarital relations the Stasi put in place targeted seductions by Romeo agents.[43] An example of this was the attempted seduction of Ulrike Poppe by Stasi agents who tried to break down her marriage.[58]

For the Zersetzung of groups, it infiltrated them with unofficial collaborators, sometimes minors.[59] The work of opposition groups was hindered by permanent counter-propositions and discord on the part of unofficial collaborators when making decisions.[60] To sow mistrust within the group, the Stasi made believe that certain members were unofficial collaborators; moreover by spreading rumors and manipulated photos,[61] the Stasi feigned indiscretions with unofficial collaborators, or placed members of targeted groups in administrative posts to make others believe that this was a reward for the activity of an unofficial collaborator.[43] They even aroused suspicions regarding certain members of the group by assigning privileges, such as housing or a personal car.[43] Moreover, the imprisonment of only certain members of the group gave birth to suspicions.[60]

Targeted groups

Punks were one such group which were considered as being culturally and politically incorrect, and thereby deemed 'hostile negative'.[62] This led to them being persecuted with 'the usual battery of 'decomposition' methods'[63] which were used to 'discredit individuals and splinter, disorientate and [...] dissolve'[63] the various groupings. The Stasi used Zersetzung tactics both on individuals and groups. There was no particular homogeneous target group, as opposition in the GDR came from a number of different sources. Tactical plans were thus separately adapted to each perceived threat.[64] The Stasi nevertheless defined several main target groups:[28] associations of people making collective visa applications for travel abroad artists' groups critical of the government religious opposition groups

youth subculture groups

groups supporting the above (human rights and peace organisations, those assisting illegal departure from the GDR, and expatriate and defector movements).

The Stasi also occasionally used Zersetzung on non-political organisations regarded as undesirable, such as the Watchtower Society of Jehovah Witnesses.[65]

Prominent individuals targeted by Zersetzung operations included Jürgen Fuchs, Gerulf Pannach, Rudolf Bahro, Robert Havemann, Rainer Eppelmann, Reiner Kunze, husband and wife Gerd and Ulrike Poppe, and Wolfgang Templin.

Public awareness and legal aspects

Once aware of his own status as a target, GDR opponent Wolfgang Templin tried, with some success, to bring details of the Stasi's Zersetzung activities to the attention of western journalists.[66] In 1977 Der Spiegel published a five-part article series, "Du sollst zerbrechen!" ("You're going to crack!"), by the exiled Jürgen Fuchs, in which he describes the Stasi's "operational psychology". The Stasi tried to discredit Fuchs and the contents of similar articles, publishing in turn claims that he had a paranoid view of its function,[67] and intending that Der Spiegel and other media would assume he was suffering from a persecution complex.[66][68] This, however, was refuted by the official Stasi documents examined after Die Wende (the political power shift in the GDR in 1989–90).

Because the scale and nature of Zersetzung were unknown both to the general population of the GDR and to people abroad, revelations of the Stasi's malicious tactics were met with some degree of disbelief by those affected.[69] Many still nowadays express incomprehension at how the Stasi's collaborators could have participated in such inhuman actions.[69]

Since Zersetzung as a whole, even after 1990, was not deemed to be illegal because of the principle of nulla poena sine lege (no penalty without law), actions against involvement in either its planning or implementation were not enforceable by the courts.[70] Because this specific legal definition of Zersetzung as a crime didn't exist,[71] only individual instances of its tactics could be reported. Acts which even according to GDR law were offences (such as the violation of Briefgeheimnis, the secrecy of correspondence) needed to have been reported to the GDR authorities soon after having been committed in order not to be subject to a statute of limitations clause.[72] Many of the victims experienced the additional complication that the Stasi was not identifiable as the originator in cases of personal injury and misadventure. Official documents in which Zersetzung methods were recorded often had no validity in court, and the Stasi had many files detailing its actual implementation destroyed.[73]

Unless they had been detained for at least 180 days, survivors of Zersetzung operations, in accordance with §17a of a 1990 rehabilitation act (the Strafrechtlichen Rehabilitierungsgesetzes, or StrRehaG), are not eligible for financial compensation. Cases of provable, systematically effected targeting by the Stasi, and resulting in employment-related losses and/or health damage, can be pursued under a law covering settlement of torts (Unrechtsbereinigungsgesetz, or 2. SED-UnBerG) as claims either for occupational rehabilitation or rehabilitation under administrative law. These overturn certain administrative provisions of GDR institutions and affirm their unconstitutionality. This is a condition for the social equalisation payments specified in the Bundesversorgungsgesetz (the war victims relief act of 1950). Equalisation payments of pension damages and for loss of earnings can also be applied for in cases where victimisation continued for at least three years, and where claimants can prove need.[74] The above examples of seeking justice have, however, been hindered by various difficulties victims have experienced, both in providing proof of the Stasi's encroachment into the areas of health, personal assets, education and employment, and in receiving official acknowledgement that the Stasi was responsible for personal damages (including psychological injury) as a direct result of Zersetzung operations.[75]

Use of similar techniques in other countries

See also: COINTELPRO and Transnational repression

Under Vladimir Putin, Russia's security and intelligence agencies have been reported to have employed similar techniques against foreign diplomats and journalists in Russia and other ex-USSR states.[76][77]

A British Defense Attache, Rear Admiral Tim Woods, declared he was targeted with Zersetzung-like methods while staying in Ukraine in 2020, in the general context of Russian preparations for invasion. He stated: 'My wife and I used to have, shall we say, uninvited guests at our apartment. There was one occasion back in 2020 when I was traveling, and she heard some - she heard noise in the middle of the night. And when she had gone to bed the night before, our then one-year-old had a big floor puzzle that was to all four corners of the dining room. And my wife came in in the morning, it was all beautifully done. There were other times when candelabras would be up - moved upside down. And things would be moved around demonstrably to know - just to let us know that, you know, we'd been visited and that they could do that.'[78]

In 2016, American press reported Zersetzung-like harassment was being carried out by Russia's secret services against U.S. diplomats posted in Moscow as well as in "several other European capitals"; the U.S. government's efforts to raise the issue with the Kremlin were said to have no positive reaction.[79] The Russian Embassy's reply was cited by The Washington Post as implicitly admitting and defending the harassment as a response to what Russia called U.S. provocations and mistreatment of Russian diplomats in the United States.[79] The Russian Foreign Ministry's spokesperson in turn accused the FBI and CIA of provocations and "psychological pressure" vis-à-vis the Russian diplomats.[80]

In 2012, The Times of Israel reported that US intelligence officials were increasingly concerned about forms of harassment which involved CIA officers' apartments in Israel being broken into, and objects interfered with and rearranged. It reported in one case, and considered in conjunction with other incidents, that 'a CIA officer in Israel came home to find the food in the refrigerator had been rearranged. In all the cases, the US government believes Israel's security services were responsible.'[81]

Wehrkraftzersezung death sentence issued by the People's Court on 8 September 1943 against Dr. Alois Geiger for defeatism Wehrkraftzersezung or Zersezung der Wehrkraft (German for "corroding military strength") was a sedition offence in German military law during the Nazi Germany era from 1938 to 1945.

Wehrkraftzersezung was enacted in 1938 by decree as Germany moved closer to World War II to suppress criticism of the Nazi Party and Wehrmacht leadership in the military, and in 1939, a second decree was issued extending the law by defining all German people as civilians subject to service discipline.[1] Wehrkraftzersezung consolidated and redefined paragraphs already in the military penal code to punish "seditious" acts such as conscientious objection,[note 1] defeatist statements, self-mutilation, and questioning the Endsieg. Convictions were punishable by the death penalty, heavy sentences in military prisons, concentration camps, or Strafbataillons.

Wehrkraftzersezung was de facto abolished in 1945 after Nazi Germany's defeat, but text from the penal code continued to be used by the Federal Republic of Germany. On 25 August 1998 and 23 July 2002, after lengthy debate, the Bundestag removed the Nazi-era sentences from the German criminal justice system, and all Nazi military sentencing for conscientious objection, desertion, and all other forms of Wehrkraftzersezung were repealed as unjust. Current German military law neither contains the term "undermining the military" nor its extensive rules, but a few offences included under the umbrella of Wehrkraftzersezung remain on the statute books in a vague form.

Etymology

The German phrase Wehrkraftzersezung can be translated into English in various forms depending on context, and is difficult to translate in its sense used by the Nazi Party. Wehrkraftzersezung is composed of three parts: Wehr means 'defence' (a cognate of the English word "war"); kraft means power, force, strength; zersezung means decay, decomposition, disintegration, dissolving (especially by acids), but also subversion or corruption.[citation needed] The context of Wehrkraftzersezung, or Zersezung der Wehrkraft, used by the Nazi Party is typically translated into English as "undermining military force" or "subversion of the war effort" (in reference to the forthcoming war effort),[1] "undermining military morale", [2] and "sedition and defeatism".[3]

Definition in the Nazi military penal code

The term Zersezung der Wehrkraft was established in German military law by the Wartime Special Penal Code (Kriegssonderstrafrechtsverordnung or KSSVO) on 17 August 1938, which criminalized all criticism, dissent and behavior opposed to Nazi political and military leadership, particularly within the Wehrmacht's military justice. The definition of the term is equivalent to the Treachery Act of 1934 but escalates the severity of the crime, with critical remarks by soldiers violating the Treachery Act were previously punished merely with a prison term, but the KSSVO added the death penalty, allowing a Zuchthaus or prison sentence only in minor cases.[citation needed] With the introduction of the Wartime Regulations for Criminal Procedures (Kriegsstrafverfahrensordnung or KStVO), those accused under the law were also deprived of the right to appeal, further weakening them at trial. The extent of the military judge's discretion and the degree of arbitrariness involved are indicated in a 1942 statement by Alfred Fikentscher, an admiral and chief medical officer in the Kriegsmarine. Speaking before military lawyers, he said, "...similar circumstances exist with subversive remarks, which may be seen as violations of the Treachery Act. Protracted submission [of documents] to the Minister of Justice to order a criminal prosecution is unnecessary if you approach the statement as undermining the military, which will be possible in almost every case."[citation needed]

The regulations created by the Wehrmacht in the course of preparing for World War II served during the war years as an instrument of terror to maintain the soldiers' "will to persevere" through coercion. Especially in the later stages of the war, the Nazi and Wehrmacht leadership were greatly afraid of repetition of the events during the German Revolution that occurred after World War I. Every act of resistance was to be suppressed so that a reoccurrence of the "stab-in-the-back" be prevented. At the beginning of 1943, the jurisdiction was transferred to the People's Court (Volksgerichtshof), though minor cases could be sent to the Sondergerichte (special courts) that were originally instituted for political crimes but by this time advanced to be the usual courts against common criminality. The Sondergerichte, not unlike later drumhead courts, prioritized hunting-down, not due process, as their express purpose.

Interpretation

§5 of the KSSVO reads:

Whoever openly challenges or incites others to refuse to fulfill their duty to serve in the German armed forces or their allies, or otherwise openly tries to self-assertively put up a fight to cripple or subvert the will of the German people or their allies ... will be sentenced to death for undermining the military.[4]

The word "openly" provided room for interpretation by authorities, so that even remarks made within one's own family could be used by relatives against the accused. The vague wording of the regulation made it possible to criminalize every type of criticism, also by civilians, deliberately encouraging denunciation as a means to more comprehensively control the population. That "undermining the war effort" in Nazi Germany was by no means a trivial offense is seen in the 1 November 1944 decree from the head of the National Socialist Secret Service of the Luftwaffe:[citation needed]

"It has long been self-evident that whoever expresses doubt about the Führer, criticizes him and his actions, spreads disparaging news or vilifies him, is without honor and worthy of death. Neither standing nor rank, nor personal circumstances or other grounds can exculpate such a case. In the most difficult, deciding period of the war, whoever expresses doubt about the final victory and thereby causes others to waver, has likewise forfeited his life!"

Among others, examples of subversion given were:[citation needed]

Remarks in opposition to Nazi ideology

Doubt about the legitimacy of the struggle for survival imposed on us [...]

Dissemination of news about battle fatigue and German soldiers deserting

Doubt about military reports

Cultivating private contact with prisoners of war

Disparaging that important weapon in war: German propaganda

Discussing contingencies in the event of defeat

The assertion, that Bolshevism "is not so bad or that the democracy of our western neighbors could be contemplated".[note 2][original research?]

Defeatist remarks were not prosecuted under military law, but were tried in military-backed "accelerated trials", such as in the case of Norbert Engel, a physiotherapist, after expressing his regret over the failure of the 20 July plot to a nurse, saying "If it had succeeded, the war would have been over in five days and we'd have been able to go home." Engel was sentenced to death but escaped the sentence by fleeing to the Netherlands.[5][6]

The introduction of the KSSVO marked a new stage in the persecution of the Nazis' political opponents and many thousands of them were killed. According to Wehrmacht criminal statistics, by 30 June 1944 there had been 14,262 convictions for Wehrkraftzersetzung, though German military historian Manfred Messerschmidt says the number of convictions was likely to have been closer to 30,000. The number of convictions and proportion of death sentences steadily increased towards the end of the war as criticism increased and the awaited "final victory" was pushed further and further into the future. The way the regulation was formulated meant that a conviction generally came from a denunciation by associates, though some convictions came from remarks in letters or slogans written on walls. The nature of denunciations meant the potential accuser could hardly be certain that during the course of the investigation, he would not also be denounced. The fact that every soldier was informed about the consequences of uttering banned speech may have inhibited the number of denunciations.[citation needed]

Use in the Federal Republic of Germany

Nazi Germany surrendered after signing their Instrument of Surrender on 8 May 1945, and the state was formally dissolved on May 23, effectively abolishing Wehrkraftzersetzung in its intended use. The Federal Republic of Germany (West Germany), established in 1949 from the occupation zones of the Western Allies, inherited legislation that had been used by Nazi Germany and its predecessors, including Wehrkraftzersetzung. West Germany's military law featured texts and phrases based on Wehrkraftzersetzung during its existence and after the reunification of Germany, and was not replaced until military law reforms in the late 1990s and early 2000s. Former Wehrkraftzersetzung-based laws are currently regulated under §§ 109-109k of the German criminal code titled "Crimes against the Defense of the Country" (Straftaten gegen die Landesverteidigung). Offences such as "Disturbing Propaganda against the Bundeswehr" is § 109d, places penalties on untruthful remarks that "disturb the operations of the Bundeswehr", as well as § 109 StGB.[7] Military conscription in Germany was suspended in 2011 for an indefinite period of time.[8]

Footnotes

The law's frequent application to conscientious objectors is now generally believed to a miscarriage of justice, even by Nazi standards. The law, vague and tyrannical as it was, did not prohibit conscientious objection as written.[citation needed]

These examples were translated from the German Wikipedia. Some of them bear a strong resemblance to a quote from Dr. Günther Vollmer, a Ministerial Director at the Reich Ministry of Justice. He wrote, "No longer tolerable and fundamentally worthy of death are [...] remarks of the following kind: The war is lost; Germany or the Führer picked a fight and senselessly or frivolously started the war and must lose it; the NSDAP should or will relinquish power and, like the Italian model, make way for the understanding of peace; a military dictatorship must be established and will be able to forge peace, one must work slowly in order to bring about the conclusion; an intrusion of bolshevism would not be as bad as the propaganda paints it, and will only harm the leading National Socialists; the English or the Americans will stop bolshevism at the German border; urging by word of mouth or letters to the front to throw down their guns or turn back; the Führer is sick, incompetent, a butcher, etc."

Kompromat

Romanization kompromat

IPA [kəmprəˈmat]

Literal meaning compromising material

Kompromat (Russian: компромат, IPA: [kəmprəˈmat] ⓘ, short for компрометирующий материал, variously translated as "compromising material", "discrediting material", or "incriminating material"), is damaging information about a person or a group, commonly a politician, businessperson, or other public figure, which may be used for negative campaigning or smear campaigning to discredit the person or group. It can also be used for blackmail purposes, often to exert influence over a person rather than for monetary gain, and extortion. In English it is also called "dark PR" or "black PR".[1] Kompromat may be acquired from security agencies or intelligence agencies, or outright forged, and then publicized, e.g., via a public relations official.[2][3]

Etymology

The term kompromat is borrowed from the Russian NKVD slang term компромат from the Stalin era, which is short for "compromising material" (komprometiruyushchy material). It refers to disparaging information that can be collected, stored, traded, or used strategically across all domains: political, electoral, legal, professional, judicial, media, and business. The information may be truthful, fictional, or a mix of both, including presenting information out of context.[4] The origins of the term in Russian trace back to 1930s secret police jargon.[5] According to the Merriam-Webster dictionary, the first known use in English was in 1990.[6]

Use in Soviet Union and Russia

Use of kompromat has been common in the politics of Russia[7] and other post-Soviet states.[8][9][10]

In the early days, kompromat included altered photographs, planted drugs, grainy videos of liaisons with prostitutes hired by the KGB, and a wide range of other primitive entrapment techniques.[11] More contemporary forms of kompromat appear as a form of cybercrime.[11] One aspect of kompromat that stands the test of time is that the compromising information is often sexual in nature.[12]

The use of kompromat is part of the political culture in Russia, with many members of the business and political elite having collected and stored potentially compromising material on their political opponents.[13] A person or organization collecting kompromat may not target specific individuals, instead collecting a range of information that could be useful later.[14] Compromising videos may be produced long in advance of when leverage over people is needed.[15]

Especially when promoted or supported by public figures or news media, kompromat is a form of disinformation, creating confusion and reducing public trust in institutions.[16][17][4]

Opposition research is conducted in the U.S. to find compromising material on political opponents so that such material may be released to weaken those opponents. Some contend that kompromat differs from opposition research, in that such information is used to exert influence over people rather than to simply win elections.[18] Nevertheless, compromising material uncovered by opposition research need not be used in only legal or ethical ways. It can be used to exert influence over Western leaders just as surely as it can be used to exert influence over Russian leaders.[19][20]

Notable cases

In the 1950s, British civil servant John Vassall was a victim of a gay honey trap operation, producing kompromat which could be used against him since homosexuality was illegal in Britain at the time.[21] During a 1957 visit to Moscow, American journalist Joseph Alsop also fell victim to a gay honey trap operation conducted by the KGB.[22]

In 1997, Valentin Kovalyov was removed as the Russian Minister of Justice after photographs of him with prostitutes in a sauna controlled by the Solntsevskaya Bratva crime organization were published in a newspaper.[5]

In 1999, a video aired with a man resembling Yuri Skuratov in bed with two women that later would lead to his dismissal as Prosecutor General of Russia. It was released after he began looking into charges of corruption by President Boris Yeltsin and his associates.[23]

In April 2010, politician Ilya Yashin and comedian Victor Shenderovich were involved in a sex scandal with a woman claimed to have acted as a Kremlin honey trap to discredit opposition figures.[24] The video was released only two days before the wedding of Shenderovich's daughter.[15]

suspected or accused of placing child pornography on the personal computers of individuals they were attempting to discredit.[11][17] In 2015, the UK's Crown Prosecution Service announced that it would prosecute Vladimir Bukovsky for "prohibited images" found on his computer;[25] however, the case against Bukovsky was put on hold as investigators tried to determine whether the pornographic images were planted.[11] Bukovsky died in October 2019.[26]

Ahead of the 2016 Russian legislative election, a sex tape of Mikhail Kasyanov emerged on NTV.[23][17]

During the 2016 U.S. presidential election, U.S. intelligence agencies investigated possibly compromising personal and financial information on President-elect Donald Trump, based on an opposition research report known as the Steele dossier, leading to allegations that he and members of his administration might be vulnerable to manipulation by the Russian government.[27][28]

British Labour Party MP Chris Bryant, an ex-chair of the all-party parliamentary group for Russia, who claims that the Russian government orchestrated a homophobic campaign to remove him from this position, has claimed that the Russian government has acquired kompromat on high-profile Conservative Party MPs. This includes Boris Johnson, Liam Fox, Alan Duncan, and David Davis.[29]

Following a 2016 phone call between incoming-U.S. National Security Adviser Michael Flynn and Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak, Flynn allegedly lied to the White House on the extent of those contacts, placing him in a position vulnerable to blackmail. According to congressional testimony delivered by former Acting U.S. Attorney General Sally Yates, the Department of Justice believed that "General Flynn was compromised," and placed Flynn in "a situation where the national-security adviser essentially could be blackmailed by the Russians".[30][31]

Websites

In 1999, Sergey Gorshkov created Kompromat.ru, a blog about scandals involving Russian politicians.[32] He posted some of the material proactively, including links to legitimate news stories, and accepted payments in exchange for posting other unverified material; the website was both controversial and recognized as an independent publication.[32] Kompromat.ru was purchased by a private investor in 2009.[33] In 2005, human rights activist Vladimir Pribylovsky created Antikompromat.org, an opposition politics website that compiled information about Russian politicians, including from news reports.[34][35]

In the 2020s, there are anonymous fake news websites that secretly take payments to publish negative information, for example from people looking to damage political or business competitors in former Soviet Union countries, while also requesting blackmail payments from targets who request removal of articles.[1][36][37] Some of the URLs include keywords such as "kompromat", "ruscrime", and "antikor".[1][38][36] The negative information may be true, false, or a mix of both.[36] These websites may also publish brief factual articles based on news agency reports, and create fake journalist names or copy the names of real journalists, to make the website look legitimate.[1][39] The websites use search engine optimization techniques to come up in web search results for a target's name.[1][39][38]

Kompromat has become a part of the political culture in Russia. Nearly everyone within Russia's business and political elite has at one time or another collected and stored potentially compromising material on their political opponents for future use. Kompromat can be real or fabricated, and generally involves drugs, prostitutes, sexual escapades, sleazy business deals, illicit financial schemes, or embezzlement.

So they'll record you, they'll do surveillance, see what you're up to. Some stuff gets in a file and maybe they can use it, maybe they can't use it.

Russian Vladimir Bukovsky, 73, a longtime critic of Soviet and Russian leaders, now lives in Britain, where he faces charges related to child pornography. But the case was delayed while investigators checked to see whether the images on Bukovsky's computer were placed there by an outside party, The New York Times reported last month, citing other similar cases.

The Serbsky Central Research Institute for Forensic Psychiatry, also briefly called the Serbsky Institute (the part of its building in Moscow)

based on the interpretation of political dissent as a psychiatric problem.[2] It was called "psychopathological mechanisms" of dissent.[3]

During the leadership of General Secretary Leonid Brezhnev, psychiatry was used as a tool to eliminate political opponents ("dissidents") who openly expressed beliefs that contradicted official dogma.[4] The term "philosophical intoxication" was widely used to diagnose mental disorders in cases where people disagreed with leaders and made them the target of criticism that used the writings by Karl Marx, Friedrich Engels, and Vladimir Lenin.[5] Article 58-10 of the Stalin Criminal Code—which as Article 70 had been shifted into the RSFSR Criminal Code of 1962—and Article 190-1 of the RSFSR Criminal Code along with the system of diagnosing mental illness, developed by academician Andrei Snezhnevsky, created the very preconditions under which non-standard beliefs could easily be transformed into a criminal case, and it, in its turn, into a psychiatric diagnosis.[6] Anti-Soviet political behavior, in particular, being outspoken in opposition to the authorities, demonstrating for reform, writing books were defined in some persons as being simultaneously a criminal act (e.g., violation of Articles 70 or 190–1), a symptom (e.g., "delusion of reformism"), and a diagnosis (e.g., "sluggish schizophrenia").[7] Within the boundaries of the diagnostic category, the symptoms of pessimism, poor social adaptation and conflict with authorities were themselves sufficient for a formal diagnosis of "sluggish schizophrenia." [8]

The process of psychiatric incarceration was instigated by attempts to emigrate; distribution or possession of prohibited documents or books; participation in civil rights actions and demonstrations, and involvement in forbidden religious activity.[9] The religious faith of prisoners, including well-educated former atheists who adopted a religion, was determined to be a form of mental illness that needed to be cured.[10] The KGB routinely sent dissenters to psychiatrists for diagnosing to avoid embarrassing public trials and to discredit dissidence as the product of ill minds.[11] Formerly highly classified government documents published after the dissolution of the Soviet Union demonstrate that the authorities used psychiatry as a tool to suppress dissent.[12]

According to the Commentary on the Russian Federation Law on Psychiatric Care, persons who were subjected to repressions in the form of commitment for compulsory treatment to psychiatric medical institutions and were rehabilitated in accordance with the established procedure receive compensation. The Russian Federation acknowledged that psychiatry was used for political purposes and took responsibility for the victims of "political psychiatry." [13]

Political abuse of psychiatry in Russia continues after the fall of the Soviet Union [14] and threatens human rights activists with a psychiatric diagnosis. [15]

Political abuse of psychiatry is the misuse of psychiatric diagnosis, detention and treatment for the purposes of obstructing the fundamental human rights of certain groups and individuals in a society.[16] It entails the exculpation and committal of citizens to psychiatric facilities based upon political rather than mental health-based criteria.[17] Many authors, including psychiatrists, also use the terms "Soviet political psychiatry"[18] or "punitive psychiatry" to refer to this phenomenon.[19]

In the book Punitive Medicine by Alexander Podrabinek, the term "punitive medicine", which is identified with "punitive psychiatry," is defined as "a tool in the struggle against dissidents who cannot be punished by legal means." [20] Punitive psychiatry is neither a discrete subject nor a psychiatric specialty but, rather, it is an emergency arising within many applied sciences in totalitarian countries where members of a profession may feel themselves compelled to service the diktats of power.[21] Psychiatric confinement of sane people is uniformly considered a particularly pernicious form of repression[22] and Soviet punitive psychiatry was one of the key weapons of both illegal and legal repression.[23]

As Vladimir Bukovsky and Semyon Gluzman wrote in their joint A Manual on Psychiatry for Dissenters, "the Soviet use of psychiatry as a punitive means is based upon the deliberate interpretation of dissent... as a psychiatric problem." [24] This work was published in Russian,[25] English,[26] French,[27] Italian,[28] German[29] and Danish.[30]

Psychiatry possesses an inherent capacity for abuse that is greater than in other areas of medicine.[31] The diagnosis of mental disease can give the state license to detain persons against their will and insist upon therapy both in the interest of the detainee and in the broader interests of society.[31] In addition, receiving a psychiatric diagnosis can in itself be regarded as oppressive.[32] In a monolithic state, psychiatry can be used to bypass standard legal procedures for establishing guilt or innocence and allow political incarceration without the ordinary odium attaching to such political trials.[31] In the period from the 1960s to 1986, the abuse of psychiatry for political purposes was reported to have been systematic in the Soviet Union and episodic in other Eastern European countries such as Romania, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, and Yugoslavia.[33] The practice of incarceration of political dissidents in mental hospitals in Eastern Europe and the former USSR damaged the credibility of psychiatric practice in these states and entailed strong condemnation from the international community.[34] Psychiatrists have been involved in human rights abuses in states across the world when the definitions of mental disease were expanded to include political disobedience.[35] As scholars have long argued, governmental and medical institutions have at times coded threats to authority as mental disease during periods of political disturbance and instability.[36] Nowadays, in many countries, political prisoners are still sometimes confined and abused in mental institutions.[37]

In the Soviet Union dissidents were often confined in the so-called psikhushka, or psychiatric wards.[38] Psikhushka is the Russian ironic diminutive for "mental hospital".[39] One of the first psikhushkas was the Psychiatric Prison Hospital in the city of Kazan. In 1939 it was transferred to the control of the NKVD, the secret police and the precursor organization to the KGB, under the order of Lavrentiy Beria, who was the head of the NKVD.[40] International human rights defenders such as Walter Reich have long recorded the methods by which Soviet psychiatrists in Psikhushka hospitals diagnosed schizophrenia in political dissenters.[36] Western scholars examined no aspect of Soviet psychiatry as thoroughly as its involvement in the social control of political dissenters.[41]

Individual cases

Sergei Pisarev

Cases of political abuse of psychiatry have been known since the 1940s and 1950s. One of these early cases was that of party official Sergei Pisarev. Pisarev was arrested after criticizing the work of the Soviet secret police in the context of the so-called Doctors' Plot, an anti-Semitic campaign waged at Stalin's instructions that should have brought about a new terror wave in the Soviet Union and possibly the extermination of the remaining Jewish communes that had outlived the Second World War.[42] Pisarev was committed to the Special Psychiatric Hospital in Leningrad which along with an analogous hospital in Sychevka has started functioning since the Second World War.[42] After his discharge, Pisarev began a campaign against political abuse of psychiatry, concentrating on the Serbsky Institute which he viewed to be the seat of the trouble.[42] As a consequence of his efforts, the Central Committee of the Communist Party formed a committee which investigated the situation and came to the conclusion that political abuse of psychiatry was actually taking place.[42] The report, however, vanished in a desk drawer and never brought about any action.[42]

Pyotr Grigorenko

In 1961, Soviet general Pyotr Grigorenko started to openly criticize what he considered the excesses of the Khrushchev regime.[43] He maintained that the special privileges of the political elite did not comply with the principles laid down by Lenin.[43] Grigorenko formed a dissident group — The Group for the Struggle to Revive Leninism.[43] Soviet psychiatrists from commissions instituted to inquire into his sanity diagnosed him at least three times — in April 1964, August 1969, and November 1969.[44] When arrested, Grigorenko was sent to Moscow's Lubyanka prison, and from there for psychiatric examination to the Serbsky Institute[43] where the first commission, which included Snezhnevsky and Lunts, diagnosed him with the mental disease in the form of a paranoid delusional development of his personality, accompanied by early signs of cerebral arteriosclerosis.[44] Lunts, reporting later on this diagnosis, mentioned that the symptoms of paranoid development were "an overestimation of his own personality reaching messianic proportions" and "reformist ideas." [44] Grigorenko was irresponsible for his actions and was thereby forcibly committed to a special psychiatric hospital.[43] While there, the government deprived him of his pension despite the fact that, by law, a mentally sick military officer was entitled to a pension.[45] After six months, Grigorenko was found to be in remission and was released for outpatient follow-up.[45] He required that his pension be restored.[45] Although he began to draw pension again, it was severely cut.[45] He became much more active in his dissidence, stirred other people to protest some of the State's actions and received several warnings from the KGB.[45] As Grigorenko had followers in Moscow, he was lured to Tashkent, half a continent away.[45] Again he was arrested and examined by psychiatric team.[45] None of the manifestations or symptoms cited by the Lunts commission were found by the second commission held in Tashkent under the chairmanship of Fyodor Detengof.[46] The diagnosis and evaluation made by the commission was that "Grigorenko's [criminal] activity had a purposeful character, it was related to concrete events and facts... It did not reveal any signs of illness or delusions." [46] The psychiatrists reported that he was not mentally sick, but responsible for his actions.[45] He had firm convictions which were shared by many of his colleagues and were not delusional.[45] Having evaluated the records of his preceding hospitalization, they concluded that he had not been sick at that time either.[45] The KGB brought Grigorenko back in Moscow and, three months later, arranged a second examination at the Serbsky Institute.[45] Once again, these psychiatrists found that he had "a paranoid development of the personality" manifested by reformist ideas.[45] The commission, which included Lunts and was chaired by Morozov, recommended that he be recommitted to a special psychiatric hospital for the socially dangerous.[46] Eventually, after almost four years, he was transferred to a usual mental hospital.[45]

In 1971, Dr. Semyon Gluzman wrote a psychiatric report on Grigorenko.[47] Gluzman came to the conclusion that Grigorenko was mentally sane and had been taken to mental hospitals for political reasons.[48] In the late 1970s and early 1980s, Gluzman was forced to serve seven years in labor camp and three years in Siberian exile for refusing to diagnose Grigorenko with a mental illness.[49]

Andrew, Grigorenko's son, was declared a hereditary madman in 1975 and was expelled from the USSR to the USA where he lives now.[50] Andrew was repeatedly told that since his father was mentally ill, then he was hereditarily mentally ill as well, and if he would not stop his appearances in defense of human rights and his father, he was told to go to psikhushka.[51]

In 1979 in New York, Grigorenko was examined by the team of psychologists and psychiatrists including Alan A. Stone, the then President of American Psychiatric Association.[52] The team came to the conclusion that they could find no evidence of mental disease in Grigorenko and his history consistent with mental disease in the past.[52] The conclusion was drawn up by Walter Reich.[53] Stone said Grigorenko's case confirms some of the accusations that psychiatry in the Soviet Union is sometimes employed as a tool of political repression.[54] In 1981, Pyotr Grigorenko told about his psychiatric examinations and hospitalizations in his memoirs V Podpolye Mozhno Vstretit Tolko Krys (In The Underground One Can Meet Only Rats)[55] translated into English under the title Memoirs in 1982.[56] In 1991, a commission, composed of psychiatrists from all over the Soviet Union and led by Modest Kabanov, director of the Bekhterev Psychoneurological Institute in St Petersburg, spent six months reviewing the Grigorenko files, drew up 29 thick volumes of legal proceedings,[57] and reversed the official diagnosis on Grigorenko in October 1991.[48] In 1992, the official post-mortem forensic psychiatric commission of experts met at Grigorenko's homeland removed the stigma of mental patient from him and confirmed that the debilitating treatment he underwent in high security psychiatric hospitals for many years was groundless.[58] The 1992 psychiatric examination of Grigorenko was described by the Nezavisimiy Psikhiatricheskiy Zhurnal in its numbers 1–4 of 1992.[59]

Viktor Rafalsky

Viktor Rafalsky, a political prisoner, dissident and author of unpublished plays, novels, and short stories, was committed to Soviet psychiatric prisons in Lviv, Dnipropetrovsk, and Leningrad for 24 years because of belonging to a clandestine Marxist group (from 1954 to 1959), writing anti-Soviet prose (from 1962 to 1965), and possessing anti-Soviet literature (from 1968 to 1983).[60] In the winter of 1987, he was discharged and pronounced sane.[60] In 1988, Viktor Rafalsky published the first version of his memoirs Reportazh iz Niotkuda (Reportage from Nowhere)[61] describing his confinement in Soviet psychiatric hospitals.[62] In his memoirs, he writes, "I will say plain: when I got into a prison (it happened quite often), I, whether you believe or not, had a rest. So what was a prison in comparison with the horror of prison psikhushkas?!"[63] Some pages below, he adds, "In a prison, you can read, write, lastly do something to kill time. In prison psikhushkas, you have the right only to look at the ceiling: it is forbidden to keep paper, pencils, and even a book." [64]

Joseph Brodsky

Joseph Brodsky (1940–1996), a Russian poet, American essayist, and the 1987 Nobel laureate in Literature

At the very end of 1963, the poet Joseph Brodsky was committed for observation to the Kashchenko psychiatric clinic in Moscow where he stayed for several days.[65] A few weeks later, his second hospitalization took place: on 13 February he was arrested in Leningrad.[65] Brought to trial for "pursuing a parasitic way of life", Brodsky was accused of being a poet and of not doing more "productive" work.[66] There were two hearings of the trial dated 18 February and 13 March 1964.[66] The judge ordered to send him "for an official psychiatric examination during which it will be determined whether Brodsky is suffering from some sort of psychological illness or not and whether this illness will prevent Brodsky from being sent to a distant locality for forced labor. Taking into consideration that from the history of his illness it is apparent that Brodsky has evaded hospitalization, it is hereby ordered that division No. 18 of the militia be in charge of bringing him to the official psychiatric examination." [67] On 18 February, the Dzerzhinsky District Court sent Brodsky for psychiatric examination to "Pryazhka," Psychiatric Hospital No. 2 where he spent about three weeks, from 18 February to 13 March.[65] In the mental hospitals, Brodsky was given "tranquilizing" injections, wakened in the middle of the night, immersed into a cold bath, wrapped in a wet sheet, and put next to the heater so that the sheet would cut into his body when it dried.[68] These two stints at psychiatric establishments formed the experience underlying Gorbunov and Gorchakov written and called by Brodsky "an extremely serious work." [69] In 1972, when the authorities considered Brodsky for exile and sought an expert opinion on his mental health, they consulted Snezhnevsky who, without examining him personally, diagnosed him with schizophrenia and concluded that he was "not a valuable person at all and may be let go." [70]

Valery Tarsis

Valery Tarsis (1906–1983), a Russian writer and political prisoner
In 1965 in the West, strong public awareness that Soviet psychiatry could be subject to political abuse arose with publication of the book Ward 7 [71] by Valery Tarsis, a writer born in 1906 in Kiev. [72] He based the book upon his own experiences in 1963–1964 when he was detained in the Moscow Kashchenko psychiatric hospital for political reasons. [72]

The fictionalised documentary Ward No. 7 by Tarsis was the first literary work to deal with the Soviet authorities' abuse of psychiatry. [73] In a parallel with the story Ward No. 6 by Anton Chekhov, Tarsis implies that it is the doctors who are mad, whereas the patients are completely sane, although unsuited to a life of slavery. [73] Individuals in ward No. 7 are not cured, but persistently maimed; the hospital is a jail and the doctors are gaolers and police spies. [73] Most doctors know nothing about psychiatry, but make diagnoses arbitrarily and give all patients the same medication — an algogenic injection or the anti-psychotic drug Aminazin [73] known in the USA under trade name Thorazine. [74] Tarsis denounces Soviet psychiatry as pseudo-science and charlatanism and writes that, firstly, it has pretenses of curing the sickness of men's souls, but denies the existence of the soul; secondly, since there is no satisfactory definition of mental health, there can be no acceptable definition of mental disease in Soviet society. [73]

In 1966, Tarsis was permitted to emigrate to the West, and was soon deprived of his Soviet citizenship. [75] The KGB had plans to compromise the literary career of Tarsis abroad through labelling him as a mentally ill person. [76] As the 1966 memorandum to the Politburo of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union reported, "KGB continues arrangements for further compromising Tarsis abroad as a mentally ill person." [77] Among all the victims of Soviet psychiatry, Tarsis was the sole exception in the sense that he did not emphasize the 'injustice' of confining 'sane dissidents' to psychiatric hospitals and did not thereby imply that the psychiatric confinement of 'insane patients' was proper and just. [78]

Evgeni Belov

Shortly after publishing Ward 7, a second case of political abuse of psychiatry gave rise to attention in Great Britain.[72] Evgeni Belov, a young Moscow interpreter contracted by a group of four British students, made friends with them.[72] At first he was positive about Soviet system, but gradually became more critical and began to voice demand for more freedom.[72] Calling for a free press and free trade unions, Belov began to write letters to the Party.[72] As a consequence, his membership in the Party was suspended and he was summoned to appear before a committee.[72] He declined, and instead sought justice higher up by writing protest letters to Leonid Brezhnev himself.[72] When British students returned from a short trip to Tokyo, Belov had vanished.[72] To their shock, it emerged that he had been committed to a mental hospital.[72] A campaign to get him out yielded no results.[72] A British newspaper published a letter in which Belov's father stated that his son was really sick, and the campaign came to a grinding halt.[72] However, the public interest had been activated.[72]

Alexander Esenin-Volpin

Awareness in the West was also raised by the case of Alexander Esenin-Volpin, a son of the famous Russian poet Sergei Esenin and born in 1924.[72] In 1946, he was first committed to the Leningrad Special Psychiatric Hospital for writing a poem considered anti-Soviet.[72] During Khrushchev's reign, Esenin-Volpin was later hospitalized three times: in 1957, in 1959–1960 in the same the Leningrad Special Psychiatric Hospital and, finally, in 1962–1963.[79] In 1968, Esenin-Volpin was again hospitalized, and for this once his case achieved the attention in the West.[79] In February 1968, 99 Soviet mathematicians and scientists sent a letter [ru] to the Soviet officials demanding his release.[80] After a wave of protests, he was discharged and permitted to immigrate to the USA where he obtained the position of professor of mathematics.[79] In 2010, Alexander Magalif, who hospitalized Esenin-Volpin, recollected that he had seen a little mark made by a pencil in the corner of the referral to treatment of Esenin-Volpin: "not to discharge from the hospital without coordination with KGB." [81]

Yuli Daniel

In 1965, the writer Yuli Daniel was arrested due to his satirical anti-Stalinist works and outspoken protest at the human rights abuse in the USSR.[82] Daniel was kept in a mental hospital of the Gulag where he was refused medical treatment in order to destroy his will.[82]

Viktor Fainberg

The Leningrad Special Psychiatric Hospital of Prison Type of the USSR Ministry of Internal Affairs where Vladimir Bukovsky, Pyotr Grigorenko, Alexander Yesenin-Volpin and Viktor Fainberg were imprisoned[83] (the St Petersburg Psychiatric Hospital of Specialized Type with Intense Observation at the present time) was one of the Soviet special psychiatric hospitals[84]

Viktor Fainberg was one of the seven participants of the 1968 Red Square demonstration against the Soviet intervention into Czechoslovakia.[85] He was committed for compulsory treatment to the Special Psychiatric Hospital in Leningrad where he was confined for five years.[85] During his confinement, a psychiatrist working in the establishment, Marina Voikhanskaya, fell in love with him and helped him as much as she could.[85] After his discharge, they married and emigrated to the United Kingdom[85] where Fainberg organized the Campaign Against Psychiatric Abuse[86] and was its director.[87] When Fainberg and Voikhanskaya had divorced, Viktor moved to Paris and Marina remained in the United Kingdom.[85]

Valeriya Novodvorskaya

Valeriya Novodvorskaya (1950–2014), a Russian politician and former Soviet human rights activist and political prisoner

In 1968, Valeriya Novodvorskaya created an underground student organization whose purpose was to overthrow the Soviet state.[88] On 5 December 1969, she was arrested in the Kremlin Palace of Congresses, where before the start of a performance of the opera October she was handing out and scattering leaflets written in verse form until she was approached by KGB men.[89] She was later sentenced to indefinite detention in the prison psychiatric hospital in Kazan.[89] Her experience in this hospital was described[90] in her largest collection of writings entitled Po Tu Storonu Otchayaniya (Beyond Despair).[91] Novodvorskaya was also committed in a mental hospital later, in 1978 as a member of the Free Interprofessional Association of Workers[92] and as a person arrested "for insulting President" in September 1990; that time she was discharged after the 1991 putsch.[93] In the early 1990s, psychiatrists of the Independent Psychiatric Association of Russia and G. N. Sotsevich proved the absence of mental illness in Novodvorskaya.[94]

Natalya Gorbanevskaya

Natalya Gorbanevskaya (1936–2013), a Russian poet and former Soviet human rights activist and political prisoner

After the 1968 Red Square demonstration against the Soviet invasion into Czechoslovakia, August 1968 saw the arrest of Natalya Gorbanevskaya well known in the West due to her book Red Square at Noon describing the demonstration.[95] A few days later, the Serbsky Institute found her non-accountable and made diagnosis of "deep psychopathy—the presence of mild, chronic schizophrenic process cannot be excluded." [95] She was allowed to return to the care of her mother.[95] In November 1969, a psychiatric commission again examined her, diagnosed "psychopathic personality with symptoms of hysteria and a tendency to decompensation", but considered that psychiatric hospitalization was not required.[95] A month later, she was again arrested and sent to the Serbsky Institute for psychiatric examination in April 1970.[95] The investigating commission chaired by Morozov found her non-responsible and that she had a "chronic, mental illness in the form of schizophrenia." [95] The commission found in her the presence of changes in the thinking processes and in the critical and emotional faculties characteristic of schizophrenia.[95] It was concluded that Gorbanevskaya took part in the Red Square demonstration in a state of the mental disease.[95] In Paris, French psychiatrists at their request examined Gorbanevskaya and found her to be mentally normal.[96] They concluded that in 1969–1972 she had been committed to a psychiatric hospital for political, not medical reasons.[96]

Zhores Medvedev

On 29 May 1970, Zhores Medvedev, an internationally respected and prominent scientist, was forcibly taken from his apartment in Obninsk and committed to a mental hospital where he was held, without legitimate medical justification, until 17 June 1970.[97] The leadership was instantly faced with the action of strong collective protest initiated by top Soviet scientists including Igor Tamm and Pyotr Kapitsa.[98] Medvedev's release was achieved only after intense pressure from intellectuals and scientists both within and outside of the USSR.[97] He was largely hospitalized because of the publication abroad of his book of Trofim Lysenko.[99] In widely circulated books, Zhores Medvedev had criticized the "geneticist" Lysenko and had also expressed his straightforward disagreement with restrictions on communication with scientists abroad.[100] He was removed from his position as head of a laboratory at the Institute of Medical Radiology and this removal was illegal, he said.[100] The diagnosis in the case-notes was "incipient schizophrenia," the diagnosis made by the psychiatric commission was "psychopathic personality with paranoid tendencies." [100] What happened to Medvedev was not a separate incident; rather, it was part, in Medvedev's words, of "the dangerous tendency of using psychiatry for political purposes, the exploitation of medicine in an alien role as a means of intimidation and punishment — a new and illegal way of isolating people for their views and convictions." [97] This experience was reflected in Zhores Medvedev's and Roy Medvedev's book A Question of Madness: Repression by Psychiatry in the Soviet Union published by Macmillan in London in 1971.[101]

Andrei Sakharov

Andrei Sakharov (1921–1989), an academician of the USSR Academy of Sciences, nuclear physicist and human rights activist

In 1971, renowned Soviet physicist Andrei Sakharov supported a protest of two political prisoners, V. Fainberg and V. Borisov, who announced a hunger strike against "compulsory therapeutic treatment with medications injurious to mental activity" in a Leningrad psychiatric institution.[102] In 1984, after publishing an article by Andrei Sakharov in the United States urging a buildup of nuclear weapons in the West, Soviet officials declared him "a talented, but sick man." [103] When sent into internal exile to Gorky "for his own peace of mind," according to officials, "Soviet medics are taking all necessary measures to restore his health." [103] One day in a selected auditorium, when discussing the situation in the country, Snezhnevsky, in the words of some of his clinical staff, diagnosed Sakharov with sluggish schizophrenia in absentia.[104] The director of KGB political police department (Fifth Directorate) Philipp Bobkov concluded, "Sakharov is objectively a mentally ill person. The complication with regards to operational consequences lies in the fact that for political reasons he cannot be committed to a psychiatric hospital." [105] Soviet authorities compulsorily committed Sakharov to a closed ward of the Semashko Hospital in Gorky, where he was force-fed and given drugs to change the state of his mind.[citation needed]

Viktor Nekipelov

Viktor Nekipelov, a well-known dissident poet, was arrested in 1973, sent to the Section

4 of the Serbsky Institute of Forensic Psychiatry for psychiatric evaluation, which lasted from 15 January to 12 March 1974, was judged sane (which he was), tried, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment.[106] In 1976, he published in samizdat his book Institute of Fools: Notes on the Serbsky Institute[107] based on his personal experience at Psychiatric Hospital of the Serbsky Institute[108] and translated into English in 1980.[109] In this account, he wrote compassionately, engagingly, and observantly of the doctors and other patients; most of the latter were ordinary criminals feigning insanity in order to be sent to a mental hospital, because hospital was a "cushy number" as against prison camps.[106] According to the President of the Independent Psychiatric Association of Russia Yuri Savenko, Nekipelov's book is a highly dramatic humane document, a fair story about the nest of Soviet punitive psychiatry, a mirror that psychiatrists always need to look into.[110] However, according to Malcolm Lader, this book as an indictment of the Serbsky Institute hardly rises above tittle-tattle and gossip, and Nekipelov destroys his own credibility by presenting no real evidence but invariably putting the most sinister connotation on events.[106] After publishing his book, he was sentenced to the maximum punishment for "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda" of seven years in a labor camp and then five years in internal exile.[106]

Political abuse of groups AGDHR members

In 1968, the human rights movement in the USSR focused directly on Soviet political psychiatry, organizing public protests and writing international bodies.[111] In 1969, a group of about 14 activists including Sergei Kovalyov, a future Russian human rights ombudsman, constituted the Action Group for the Defense of Human Rights in the USSR.[112] The group composed the first samizdat (self-published) human rights bulletin, A Chronicle of Current Events. [112] Among the members of the Action Group were individuals who subsequently fell victim to psychiatric abuse themselves: the poet Natalya Gorbanevskaya who in 1968 demonstrated on Red Square against bringing Soviet tanks into Czechoslovakia; Vladimir Borisov who later was one of the founders of the independent labor movement in the Soviet Union; Vladimir Maltsev, a translator; and Leonid Plyushch, a Ukrainian cyberneticist who was committed to the Special Psychiatric Hospital of Dnepropetrovsk and was awfully tortured with neuroleptics.[79] Later three senior Fellows of the Royal College of Psychiatrists examined Leonid Plyushch and "saw no indication of schizophrenia or other mental illness." [113]

AFTU members

In November 1977, a group of unemployed and workers led by Vladimir Klebanov, a former coalminer from the Donbas region of Ukraine, announced the formation in the Soviet Union of the Association of Free Trade Unions of Workers (AFTU) whose purposes were to meet obligations achieved by collective bargaining; to induce workers and other employees to join free trade union associations; to implement those decisions of the Association which concern the seeking of justice and the defense of rights; to educate Association members in the spirit of irreconcilability toward wastefulness, inefficiency, deception, bureaucracy, deficiencies, and a negligent attitude toward national wealth.[92] These purposes show that AFTU was in all respects an organization whose right to exist is guaranteed by the international obligations of the Soviet Union.[114] On 19 December 1977, Klebanov along with two other workers in Donetsk was arrested by the Soviet militia and released nine days later, after international protests against his incarceration.[114] Worker Gavriil Yankov was incarcerated in Moscow mental hospital for two weeks.[114] On 1 February 1978, AFTU publicly announced the institution of its organizational Charter.[114] Several days later, Klebanov was again detained by Soviet police and sent from Moscow to psychiatric prison hospital in Donetsk.[114] Group member Nikolaev and workers Pelekh and Dvoretzky were also placed under psychiatric detention.[114]

SMOT members

By October 1978 it was apparent that arrests and repressions had resulted in the dissolution of AFTU.[114] But the cause of trade union rights was to be invigorated by a new group, the Free Interprofessional Association of Workers known by its Russian acronym, SMOT, whose first press conference was held in Moscow on 28 October 1978.[114] The objectives of SMOT were to defend its members in cases of violation of their rights in different spheres of their daily activities: political, domestic, religious, spiritual, cultural, social, and economic; to look into the legal basis of the workers' complaints; to ensure that these complaints were brought to the notice of relevant organizations; to facilitate a quick solution to complaints of workers; and in cases of negative results, to publicize them widely before international and Soviet public.[115] The leadership of SMOT was headed by a native of Leningrad electrician Vladimir Evgenievich Borisov, who was incarcerated in Soviet mental hospitals because of his human rights activism for a total of nine years in the 1960s and 1970s.[114] In November and December 1978, Soviet police searched the homes of SMOT activists, and SMOT members Vladimir Borisov, Valeriya Novodvorskaya, Albina Yakoreva, and Lev Volokhonsky were arrested and detained by Soviet authorities.[116] Both Borisov and Novodvorskaya were held in mental hospitals.[116]

Gang Stalking A survival guide for Targeted Individuals

SOMEBODY DOWN

RONY BOLIVAR, 2024 FACTS WHAT IS GANGSTALKING? Gangstalking refers to a pattern of organized scheme harassment, involving law enforcement and high government authorities working together with multiple individuals to monitor (covert surveillance), intimidate, isolate and persecute a Targeted Individual (T.I). Violating their privacy and intimacy by using technology hacking (wiretapping, device bugging, between other cyber espionage tactics, along with the use of mind control and manipulation techniques to cause constant distress by invalidating the victim's perception of his own reality and label him in a pattern of delusional thinking associated to a mental illness.

RONY BOLIVAR, 2024 SUBJECT OF GANG STALKING WHY THEY DID THIS TO ME? You were picked as the Targeted Individual because you possess a different characteristic of special meaning for them to envy and be scared of; although everybody can develop personality traits in different levels, some are afraid to show it up and because you do that's your boldness. You were selected in biased of any protected characteristic related to national origin, sexual orientation, age, race, color, gender identity, disability or immigration status. They do a research of the subject's background to find weaknesses studying your behavioral patterns, closed friends and relatives circle, frequent locations, bank accounts, belonging to a social class or group, daily activities. They got your personal information using database research from government institutions, contacting former workplaces, hacking your device's network, law enforcement surveillance, cyber intelligence, etc.

RONY BOLIVAR, 2024 PERPETRATORS WHO IS DOING THIS? A "hater" someone who besides being obsessed with you, often expresses strong, unwarranted, negativity or criticism toward you and your achievements, harboring resentment, envy, or dislike just because everybody does. This person is the one who started the vicious circle of stalking which evolves to a vilification of the targeted individual when the "hater" surrounds himself with allies in the law enforcement (cops, covert cops, high authorities in state police dept., etc) who, illegally gives cooperation and protection but also helps finding a way of trafficking victim's personal information with thugs and data brokers, these malicious actors do this with the purpose of damaging victim's reputation creating a smearing campaign to publicly humiliate, discredit and vilified the targeted individual, while law enforcement is looking for incrimination using manipulated evidence collected by paid informants about the subject of gang stalking.

RONY BOLIVAR, 2024 OVERCOMING THE GANG STALKING WHAT TO DO Self Care: Love and know yourself (weakness / strengths), learn how to spend time alone, distance yourself from unsafe people/places, limit your public exposure, reflect over your reactions. Stay alert and equipped with a body camera, see something record it. Trust nobody. Observe, Discern and Document: It will help you establish evidence for future actions. Question, Research: What if (...) ? ; Gather related info online. Hypothesize, Experiment: reasonable proposition; Let's try this (...) Analyze, Conclude: results from this behavior/action. Publicize the harassment and their perps (date, location, time, names, media).

RONY BOLIVAR, 2024 HOW TO CUTTING OUT THE GANGSTERS WHAT NOT TO DO Going to the police: If you're the Targeted Individual going to the police will make it worst, since they're involved in, they'll pretend to assist you by doing nothing but laughing and call you "crazy"; they'll steal your evidence and referred you to a mental health professional. Engaging with the stalkers: "don't feed the gang", that's what they want you to do; document any provocation or public harassment and publicize it; by doing so, you're showing the world that it's not your imagination. They're checking upon your reactions trying to find a way of accuse you for the least misconduct. Killing yourself: Never attempt to commit suicide, don't give up with your life, stay strong and reluctant to ignore the situation, you're not the problem; they're. They've put a prize for your head, don't let them bring you down. Hiding or Escaping: As a victim you can limit your public exposure if you feel unsafe at some places but don't lockdown because of fearfulness to uncertainty. Keep living your life at your best. They've should be afraid for what they've done to you, not you fearing them. Address it boldly.

RONY BOLIVAR, 2024 REALIZING THE ISSUE WHEN THIS WILL END? It's not up to you to finish it but to confront yourself with the idea of living with the enemy, sometimes we're not fully aware that the change starts with us to project it towards the world but in order to make it happen you'll need to be prepared to accept situations out of your control; they will try to isolate you soiling the 100% of your reputation and that's ok because that means you're so enough with yourself in terms of boldness and trustworthiness that they need to joined together to discredit the strong values that compound your character. Let them destroy themselves in their hatred cause at the end of the day, hate is the only thing that keeps alive their empty souls. Stop waiting for an end to come cause it will take you by surprise, nowadays, rejoice being the focus of their attention, mindset your achievements during the storm and battle them soberly with kindness and respect.

Venezuelan immigrant, lawyer, teacher, amateur writer, artist and mental therapist with more than five years in counseling. I've been victim of gang stalking from 2020 living in New York City, schematically harassed by the NYPD and victim of workplace mobbing since 2019, my vast experience working within the healthcare field teaches me how to deal with this situation and how to develop skills to survive the passive aggressive attacks while having a peaceful live assisting others victims to achieve their goals properly. RONY BOLIVAR, 2024 ABOUTTHEAUTHOR RONY BOLIVAR

Training Manual for Gangstalking.

“Is Mind Control Possible? Absolutely. There is a mountain of evidence... Today we know there are technologies that can induce sound into the brain at a distance, can monitor and alter brainwaves at a distance, can alter behavior at a distance, can induce images into the brain at a distance, can target individual organs at a distance. Can disrupt the calcium ions binding on individual cell surfaces at a distance, creating pain and other effects anywhere in the body. Mind control technology exists, without a question.”

-- Dr Eldon Byrd, Naval Officer, 2001

Dr Rauni Kilde, M.D. was the Chief Medical Officer for Northern Finland, where she became aware of the government's Gangstalking program. She wrote a book exposing the Targeted Individual program, that included the training manual for Gangstalking. The use of British spellings, suggest that it may have been originally written by British Intelligence agents.

Chapter 18 Overview of Harassment Methods Used By (FBI's) COINTELPRO, (OPERATION) GLADIO, Covert Community Recruits and Stay Behind (Armies): (OR "Instruction Manual for Community Gang Stalkers")

1. GENERAL

Operations in general are of the "active surveillance" type. Passive surveillance is watching a target covertly, to obtain information about the target. Active surveillance can include information gathering, but it (also) includes the agent making the target aware they are under surveillance. Beyond active surveillance, agents perform acts to keep the target uncomfortable, around the clock. Although operations are silently approved of, and covered for by the official justice system, (they are not) seen as criminal in nature by citizens who do not have a strong sense of right and wrong. Agents must take great care that each and every act of punishment is DENIABLE. This means that should the target complain to police, (or) any other officials, or friends, neighbors, family members, or doctors, the nature of the punishment must be seen as the target's "overactive imagination" or better yet, an indication the target is mentally ill. (The system) has worked for years to recruit the medical establishment to help maintain deniability, and today, most targets (are) immediately labeled as mentally ill and often forced onto anti-psychotic medication when they complain. But their agents must still do their part skillfully (to) perform acts of punishment, so (that) almost anyone the target complains to will deny a crime against the target has taken place. As an agent, you will be trained in how to do this.

(The system) has been blessed with advanced technology which enables heavy punishment at times the target is in their home, silently, through walls, and this is very deniable. Agents must pass their initial training and demonstrate a high level of commitment to maintain community safety, and the ability to operate deniably, before they will be considered for advanced electronic punishment training. Electronic punishment training is beyond the scope of this manual.

The organization is very fortunate in that we have been able to recruit top specialists to back up field operations people. Psychologists are the key to finding ways to maximize feelings of stress and hopelessness in the target, and degrading the target's health, from many individual “minor” invasive punishment acts. Technician’s in all fields- telecommunications, electric power, building electrical and alarm systems, and utility employees in all fields use their positions to inflict many absolutely “normal-looking” problems on targets on an ongoing basis. And of course, the services of many skilled locksmiths are invaluable in this. As a community-based agent (CBA) you will have the privilege of working with a team capable of delivering better “justice” than the official system.

2. SURVEILLANCE

Surveillance is the foundation of all operations. Both community-based agent (CBA) visual surveillance and advanced electronic surveillance are used. This chapter will cover only local agent visual surveillance. Your local lead agent will schedule surveillance watches for each target in that community. Every target will have at least one CBA watching them (at) all times, even while at home and asleep. Each CBA surveillance team will be given a cell phone number for reporting target actions and movement to the local Control Center (CC).

Actions to be reported include, but are not limited to:

Target turns lights on to start the day.

Target uses toilet or shower

Target exits residence

Target drives away

Target arrives at work, or

Target shops or visits any other establishment or location.

Target arrives home

Target eats meal, at home or in restaurant

Target engages in sexual activity

Target turns lights off at the end of the day

Target turns light on in the middle of the night

Target travels out of town

Some of these observations will be performed by the Electronic Corps (EC), but CBA’s should attempt to make and report as many detailed observations of target activity as possible. The reason such detail is necessary is that the punishment phase of active surveillance requires that supervisors customize each punishment action to match the personality of (the) target, and the need to make each punishment action appear to be “life’s normal breaks.”

One important punishment function of surveillance is to sensitize the target. Targets are never told they are under surveillance or being punished. Instead, close, active surveillance and other activities, happening far too frequently to be written off as “life’s normal breaks,” will eventually cause the target to realize they are under surveillance and punishment.

As a community-based agent (CBA), you will be given specific instruction(s) on exactly when, where, and how to carry out punishment actions. As long as you carry out punishment instructions exactly as given, there is no way the target will be believed if they complain, and you will not be exposed to risk of action by law enforcement.

How well the punishment actions work depends on how accurate and complete your reports are in many situations(. The) Control Center (CC) acquires access to properties or apartments immediately next to the target's homes or apartments. Because EC (Electronic Corps) has through-the-wall surveillance and punishment equipment, they will be reporting target activity along with community-based agents. In a typical setup, CBA's may be posted in a parked car where the target's home or apartment can be observed overnight, for example.

In this setup, the CBA in the car may be instructed to call, using walkie-talkie-style cell phones, another CBA (or team) waiting or patrolling by car nearby to follow the target, or, you may be assigned to follow the target yourself. You will receive instructions from your local center as to following the target.

Targets in transit may be either covertly or visibly followed. When in doubt, hang back a bit, and contact the center for instructions, as targets in transit can present many unanticipated situations. The Center will always have the target's position monitored, so if a target gives the CBA the slip, it will assign other appropriate community based agents to pick up the target at the earliest opportunity. Be sure to notify (the Control Center) immediately if you lose the target.

When applying the visible following of a target, making the target uncomfortable because of your presence, you will be given instructions as to when to break off the following. Another CBA or CBA team may pick up the visible following, but once you have broken away, they advise that you are clear and ready for the next assignment.

3. INTERCEPTS

Intercepts are where community-based agents (CBA) will appear to "just coincidentally" cross paths, on foot, with the target. Once the target has been sensitized to the point of realizing they are under surveillance and punishment, they will recognize, and be made appropriately uncomfortable by, the simple act of multiple CBA's "just happening to" cross paths with them.

Your local control center will instruct you as to how you will be cued to perform an intercept. Often you will have an on-site supervisor (OSS) position you, and give you hand signals as to when to start your movement to intercept the target. Because targets moving about aren't always totally predictable, the success of CBA intercepts depends heavily on the Electronic Corps who have means of monitoring the exact whereabouts of every target, and through computer programs, predict exactly when and where a target will be as they move about the community. Your local OSS has a special means of receiving instant, silent instructions for the Center.

1. Intercepting CBAs may be asked to perform one of the following forms of intercept:
2. Simple path crossing, requiring the target to take evasive action to avoid collision, multiple CBAs sometimes perform this several times during a single outing by a target. On foot, walking for an extended period on the opposite side of the street from walking target.

3. Arriving at a place known to be a favorite of the target, and simply occupying that place just as the target is about to arrive (restaurants, parks, public facility seating, even bus seats are examples); sometimes just “hanging out” in such a location at times and places where people don’t ordinarily do that.

4. Smoking, coin-jingling, whistling, or toe-tapping near the target at a location where the target is known to need to stand, as to wait for the bus, or standing right behind a target at a water fountain.

5. A group, as many as a dozen CBAs, may be assigned to arrive at a store just ahead of a target, and form a queue ahead of the target, spending time buying lottery tickets, to delay the target. (The target) is very tired and eager to get home after work, for example, or in a hurry.

6. Community-based agents may be assigned to leave a next door home or apartment exactly the same time as the target, repeatedly. Alternatively, a CBA may intercept the target a short way before home and arrive at exactly the same time as the target. While these may seem like trivial acts, keep in mind that the target will have these “trivial” things happen every single day, and repeated intercepts like these will force the target to always watch for such acts, essentially ensuring the target never “has a nice day.” This is the goal, to ensure the target’s punishment. Similar intercept operations are performed with vehicles. The Center can schedule these every day the target commutes, and both to and from work. Vehicle intercepts are particularly effective when the target sees the same vehicle in an intercept convoy both in the morning and in the evening commute. (Because vehicle intercepts can be dangerous, CBA assigned to vehicle intercept duty must successfully complete a special training course prior to actual assignment.) Here are some examples of vehicle intercepts a community-based agent (CBA) can expect to be assigned.

-Parking so as to prevent a target’s leaving a parking area, and then disappearing.

-Parking commercial vehicles often, near target’s home with something unusual about these vehicles, such as there is no need for that trade, or just unmarked white vans to make the target think the van is there to conduct surveillance.

-Simple following, or leading, a short distance, but every day. Doing this, both during target commutes and then other times makes the target very uncomfortable.

-Passing as side street stop sign, then stopping an uncomfortable distance into oncoming traffic just as target is about to arrive at the side street, causing the target to have to slam on the brakes (this requires Control Center assistance and prompting by walkie-talkie style cell phone).

-For a CBA vehicle convoy, boxing in the target during a commute, forcing the target to travel at a lower speed than the target wants to travel. In some locations, the Center will supply special license plates to CBA vehicles with short words which have special meaning to the target.

-For a CBA convoy, and where the target is at a location (and time) where traffic is normally very sparse, cause heavy traffic, forcing the target to notice.

The ultimate vehicle intercept is the staged accident. This can be dangerous and is only assigned to very senior agents. However, it is possible to stage an accident so only the target knows it was staged. This is an excellent means of punishment where a target has committed a serious offense specifically against secret services by revealing their criminality to the public. Generally, staged accidents are done in jurisdictions where police strongly support the operations, so that the CBA driver is protected.

4. PHYSICAL SABOTAGE

Physical sabotage is an especially effective form of punishment when it is carefully limited to low value items, below the value where police will take the report seriously. For example, burning a target's house down, or even stealing an expensive appliance, would bring official investigators into the picture, so that is not done.

Sabotage producing extreme safety hazards is generally not suitable for operations, because of the potential for bringing official investigators to an accident scene. So while damaging the brake system of a target's vehicle is not allowed for community-based agents (CBAs), draining some of the oil, transmission fluid or radiator antifreeze is allowed, but not all of it. The goal is to make it look as if the target is negligent in maintaining fluid levels, and generally not causing a catastrophic failure that non-targets might see as sabotage.

It is very important to apply punishment by way of a large number of small value sabotage acts, because that makes it look like the target is forgetful, exaggerating, or in some cases even delusional, if they complain about many cases of small value damage. The target's associates will simply refuse to believe that anyone but the target is responsible.

Sabotage is very important in that it lets the target know they are totally helpless to stop it, and can't even complain about it effectively without appearing mentally ill. (The) organization (is) very fortunate in that some people, hearing about sabotage from a target did the sabotage themselves, "to get attention."

Sabotage is applied at the target's home, workplace, and on their vehicle. This requires the assistance of locksmiths and alarm technicians. Your local Control Center will supply this help, and will bring specialists in from a distance in the case of rural areas.

Here are some examples of sabotage a community-based agent (CBA) may be assigned to carry out:

- Entering a vehicle, or home, and changing control and radio settings.
- Replacing window washer fluid with water, possibly destroying the system in winter.
- Scratching the paint on the target's vehicle, scratching furniture and valuables.
- Tire sabotage, from removing some air right up to slashing a sidewall if authorized by the Center.
- Simulating a break in electric window heater strips.
- Cutting off the 4-way flasher button.

- Removing substantial amounts of oil, transmission fluid or antifreeze but not enough to cause catastrophic failure.
- Moving things around inside the vehicle to show the target someone got in.
- Unlocking the vehicle and leaving it unlocked, possibly even with door open.
- Small cuts to car's upholstery.
- Unlocking the target's front or back door and leaving it ajar while the target is away, even at midnight at New Year for Y2 hour.
- Moving furniture or carpets around fairly frequently to show the target someone was there.
- Stealing low-value items, especially items like scissors which can be easily misplaced, keeping them until the target replaces the item, then return the missing item, often in a place the target checked.
- Stealing important papers, especially those which will cost money to replace.
- Stealing irreplaceable photographs.
- While target is at work, remove mail from their box and toss it around. Repeatedly making wall pictures crooked.
- Setting clocks to the wrong time.
- Repeatedly dumping consumable supplies (e.g. coffee) to make the target think they are no longer capable of managing their supplies well.
- Starting small rips in new clothing, which are widened on repeated visits.
- Ripping crotches out of the target's underwear, or stealing finest underwear, swim suits, etc.
- Replacing clothing with similar items which are too small for the target, like for children what target does not have.
- Ironing inside button flags over, making buttoning the shirt or top difficult.
- Carefully working the tip of a knife through seams in any air mattress or cushion the target may own, including replacements, on a daily basis.
- Breaking zippers in clothes and bags, perhaps by pulling out a tooth or two.
- Shoving a knife through the soles of waterproof boots.
- At work, removing screws from the target's office chair, or at home dinner table leaving only one screw of four, left to tilt the table with china.
- At work, damaging or destroying (if not extremely obvious) a target's work from a previous day, (for example), the computer is broken again possibly worse.
- At work, replacing current copies of computer files with an older copy- particularly serious if target is a computer programmer.
- At work, where some employees are or can be recruited to be community-based agents, set up "mistaken deliveries" of heavy goods which block the target's office.
- At work, if the target is responsible for parts of the operation which can be sabotaged, do so repeatedly just as the target starts eating lunch, or is about to leave for home.
- At work where the target is responsible for materials (that) can't be locked up, sabotage or with special permission from the Control Center steal the material.

Thefts have to be carefully considered and authorized by your local Center, unless you have authorization, do not steal. One particularly effective type of theft is to remove small value, but often used items from the target's premises. Once the target has been observed purchasing a replacement, the item is returned. This not only causes the target to spend money uselessly, (it also) imposes a feeling of total helplessness on the target.

5. SABOTAGING THE TARGET'S REPUTATION

Sabotaging the target's reputation- and all that goes with it, such as ability to earn a living, business and personal relationships- is a very special operations category. Newer community-based agents will not be assigned to "engineer" the method, but will assist in passing "rumours," which are the main means of destroying a target's public image.

"Rumours" consist mainly of lies. However, in order to secure cooperation of specific members of the community to participate in the punishment phase, additional information keyed to appeal to the patriotic or community service sense of such community members may be used as well. As mentioned earlier, the organization has many top psychologists and psychiatrists on permanent staff at headquarters, and some in larger population centers. It is their responsibility to design the campaign to destroy the target's reputation.

These people listed below can be approached and given information which will cause them to make the target's association with them uncomfortable, or break off all contact with the target.

- Business contacts.
- Supervisors.
- Co-workers.
- Casual social contacts, such as clubs a target may be a member of, or a group that frequents a bar where the target is a patron.
- Friends.
- Local fraternal organizations- they are motivated by the public service, and are an excellent source of assistance in keeping the target under surveillance, and participating in the punishment phase as well.
- Store staffs at places the target shops.
- Target's landlord.
- Target's neighbors.
- Tradesmen who are likely to service the target's home, car, or business.
- Bus drivers on the target's route.
- Local children.
- City employees, including emergency medical technicians, ambulances.
- Homeless shelter staff and residents where applicable.
- Family members (surprisingly, many are ready to believe negative information.)
- Especially, personnel at places the target applies for work.

How intensely (these sabotage operations are carried out) is governed mainly by the need to prevent the target from (learning) that the negative rumors are being spread. The goal is to keep negative information covertly flowing into the community, in such a way that those receiving the information aren't likely to tell the target. One might think that friends and family members would instantly notify the target and side with the target. Fortunately, experience shows that co-opting friends and family is surprisingly easy, once they are informed about the target's criminal record. The Headquarters staff have developed techniques which by and large prevent that, but those techniques are beyond the scope of this manual. Suffice it to say that it is possible to apply "incentives" which cause even people closest to the target to cooperate. These incentives are applied by specialists from our organization at higher than the local level. For the community-level CBA, the work of sabotaging the reputation of the target takes the form of simply carrying out instructions from your Control Center as to what you say to whom, how, and when.

6. DISCREDITING TARGETS

While the powerful silent support of operations by the justice and psychiatric systems has been sufficient to prevent the target from informing the public, the area of discrediting targets is an ongoing activity. Like sabotaging the target's reputation, discrediting their public statements, web sites, media appearances, letters to the editor and the like are done under the supervision of psychologists and psychiatrists on their staff. If a community-based agent (CBA) has a good track record of intelligently carrying out assignments, and has access to a computer, the CBA may apply to the local Control Center for assignment to discredit work. Excellent communications skills are required. Some of the activities CBAs carry out under supervision are:

- Monitoring message boards, Wogs, and open media like Indy media for target posts. This is normally done in special shifts and under scheduling and control at a higher level than your local CC. This monitoring is assisted by blog scanning software which will detect and instantly flag posts relating to activities. The CBA doing this work will immediately reply with comments like "Someone isn't taking their medication" or "target name" has provided absolutely no evidence." The CBA will then report the post to higher level supervisors for possibly more detailed responses.

- Monitoring newspapers in your area for letters to the editor regarding activities. Most editors and many reporters have been recruited and are willing to assist in keeping the important work of monitoring and neutralizing quiet, but once in a while, a letter to the editor will slip through. In this case, comments like "Someone isn't taking their medication" are not an appropriate response. Transcribe and forward such a letter to the editor to the supervisor, along with your proposed response. The supervisor may edit your response, and will assist in ensuring your response is printed.

- Your supervisor will have staff monitoring upcoming talk show appearances by targets. While most talk show hosts, even those somewhat sympathetic to targets, have received discrediting information and often will not host targets, some targets do manage to get on the air. In this case, your supervisor will assign you to call in to the show, and instruct you as to appropriate things to say, such as rebutting the target's claims, pretending to be a target calling and making "wacko" statements such as "UFOs are harassing me," or pulling the discussion away from real activities and to something like “media mind control.”

-Agents who have excellent persuasive communication skills can be assigned, with careful coaching and preparation from supervisors, to pretend to be a target and get on talk shows known to air targets as the guest. These opportunities are great ways to discredit targets by talking about UFOs, things like black helicopters following you, foil beanies, satellites “parked” just above your home, and perhaps events normally considered “paranormal” like seeing (things that) appear and disappear. These discrediting topics must be a total surprise to the host, only mentioned after the show is in progress.

-CBA can “casually” describe the “odd behavior” exhibited by the target as a result of around the clock activities to the target’s neighbors. The idea is to focus the neighbors’ attention to the target’s behavior, hinting that maybe the target is mentally ill. This is easy once the target has developed suspicion that “everyone is out to get” him or her.

It is a special “honor” for CBAs to be chosen for target discreditation work.

7. TRADE-RELATED PUNISHMENT

This section will give some examples of ways community-based agents (CBAs) with specific trades or situations in the community can apply deniable punishment to targets.

-Underground utility crews, where the management has been recruited, schedule messy, noisy maintenance at the target’s home (or business if the target runs a business). This can include having the street torn up for extended periods, or repeatedly. Funding for unneeded work is available from headquarters. Taxi drivers can delay arriving when called by the target, especially when going to the airport.

-Bus drivers have leeway, in nasty weather for example, to stop one stop away from awaiting target and wait there for perhaps 5 minutes, ostensibly to “get back on schedule.” This can also cause a target to miss connections with the next bus or train. This is especially effective when the target, exposed to bad weather, can see the bus waiting up the street for no apparent reason, or not stopping at all at your bus stop.

-Repair trades people can keep “getting it wrong” necessitating many recalls, be late, be messy, over-bill the target, and even damage things which were OK. This is especially effective in the automobile repair trade.

-Medical lab technicians can substitute blood samples, or otherwise falsify results making the target appear to have absolutely no reason for their complaints.

-Police can frequently pull the target over for frivolous reasons.

-Telephone and cable TV technicians can re-route legitimate calls to the target’s number in large numbers, and this will cause the target to get very angry with these totally innocent callers.

-Store staff where the target shops frequently can be instructed to remove items the target is known to need when a target is known to be coming. Store management can stop ordering a target’s favorite items.

-Restaurants and food delivery services can tell the target they are out of an item known to be a favorite of a target.

The key to successful punishment by trades people is that while the target is very likely to know they are being punished, these punishment acts must appear to the general public as "life's normal breaks."

8. TARGET'S HOME

Punishing the target at the target's (home) is essential for effectiveness of secret service operations. If the target were punished in the community but was allowed sanctuary in their home, the creation of a "prison without walls" would not be complete. One of the very first things the Control Center (CC) will arrange is for homes or apartments adjacent to the target's home to be occupied by both community-based agents (CBAs) and members in the Electronic Operations manual. Because operations are carried out 24/7 in shifts, homes and apartments which are leased or owned by staff are not used as dwellings. The lease or deed will bear either an entirely false name, or the name of a senior staff member whose actual home will be at a different location.

Some adjacent homes or apartments are occupied by neighbors of the target who have offered to cooperate in punishment of the target. The initial contact of neighbors to determine their willingness to cooperate is done by senior staff, and incentives to cooperate are often tendered. Here are some commonly used punishment activities which are carried out both by CBAs and cooperating neighbors of the target. Activities are rotated among the choices, but at least one of them is applied daily:

-Noise. Noise must be of a type which the general public deems "normal." Remember that the goal is to have the target aware they are being punished, but not be able to convince anyone else that that is the case. Observe local noise curfews, but plenty of punishment can occur outside noise curfew times. The target must not have easy cause to involve law enforcement. Examples:

-Start leaf blower, times precisely when the target attempts to enjoy their yard, or when EC operators cue the CBA that the target is trying to nap.

-Loud music from neighboring home. This is an excellent action, as it is common. Time it so every time the target opens a window the music starts. The timing makes the point it is intentional punishment. EC operator can apply music in adjacent apartments with exceptionally powerful bass, directed at the target's unit.

-Frequent squealing of tires near target's home.

-In apartments, frequent drilling into a scrap of wood or masonry held against the target's wall, floors or ceiling as if "working." Alternatively, hammering. Especially effective when cued by EC operators that the target is attempting to nap.

-Tossing golf or tennis balls against the target's home when the target is known to be trying to fall asleep. Ideal for cooperating neighbor children.

-Frequent use of sirens near the target's home. Many emergency services employees have a strong sense of community service and willingness to cooperate in this, or by people posing as Jehovah's Witnesses.

- Knocking on the door for frivolous/nonsensical/wrong address reasons. Especially effective when the target is in bed or having a meal.

- Trash. Leave trash in the target's yard. Frequently, but CC staff will assist in scheduling this so that the target can't quite have a case on which law enforcement will act.

- Terrifying the target's pet. This requires entry while the target is away from home for an extended period and must be scheduled by CC. Electronic Corps (EC) operators can render a dog or cat passive for safe entry of the community-based agents, by electromagnetic beam.

- Wounding or killing the target's pet. Rarely used, scheduled when the target has acted in a way so as to deserve special punishment, like divulging the name of a criminally acting secret agent.

- Killing domestic animals or wildlife and leaving them on the target's doorstep.

Scheduled when the target has acted in a way so as to deserve special punishment.

- Where the target owns substantial land, noxious activities can be arranged and built for next to the property. In one case, a dump, an auto race track, and a prison were built adjacent to a target who owned a large farm in an area of natural beauty. While this is rare, it does illustrate commitment to delivering punishment to those "deserving" of it.

- Cooperating police departments can visibly watch the target's home. Possibly being parked in front of the home when the target returns, repeatedly.

Police officers who refuse to take complaint of harassment and sabotage of the target, who they label "disturbed" – really are NOT allowed to make diagnoses, as only medical doctors can do, but may get a raise- price- for their unlawfulness afterward. Police follow orders by e.g. Stay Behind, Secret Military-led organization, created by the CIA after WWII in NATO countries. They give orders in secrecy to police, media, legal system, and judges, etc. Thus, being above parliaments and governments as demonstrated, for example, in Norway when in 1957 the Chief of "Stay Behind" Sven Ollestad gave the security code of Norway to MI6 (British Intelligence) in the UK acting on his own! "We have to trust our allies," he had said. Today, the security code of Norway is kept in Wales. Originally, Stay Behind was created with good intentions to fight communism. Today it is out of control, and a new, much bigger Stay Behind 2 is active in Norway. The Stay Behind logo resembles the NATO logo.

In Italy, Stay Behind was called Gladio 2 and dealt with terrorism secretly in Western Europe. It was responsible, for example, for the kidnapping and killing of Prime Minister Aldo Moro in 1978, while the blame was pinned on the Red Brigade. Today, enemies are communists and NATO (is the) opposition.

On November 22, 1990, the European Union forbade Operation Gladio, but although Norway follows most EU decisions, this one is omitted. Italy and Belgium had terror actions by Stay Behind, and when the organizations (ceased to exist, the terror operations also ceased to exist). In Norway, Stay Behind is called E14. What was its role in Norway's terror actions, if any? Some have tried to get control of Norwegian Stay Behind (armies) already years ago. Who are the back men giving orders to those "officially" in charge?

The late Chief Medical Officer of northern Finland, and Targeted Individual, Dr. Rauni-Leena Lukanen Kilde

Appendix 1. Key Words and Phrases

Key words to chapter 18.

Major operational components of organization:

- Community-based agent (CBA)

- Electronic Corps (EC)

- Electronic Operations Manual

- electromagnetic beam

- Control Center (CC)

- On-Site-Supervisor (OSS)

Field Operations People

- Psychologists/Psychiatrists

- Advanced computer communications systems and computer programs

Elements of (secret service) gang stalking operations:

- Surveillance is foundation of all operations

- Operations are “active surveillance type”

- Passive surveillance, watching the target covertly, to obtain information

- Community-Based Agents- CBA

- Every act of punishment is DENIABLE

- Advanced technology enables heavy punishment (when) the target is in their home, silently through walls.

- Electronic Corps (EC) members get specialized Electronic punishment training

- Advanced electronic surveillance

- This manual

- Field operations people

- Psychologists are the key to find ways to maximize feelings of stress and hopelessness in target, and degrading target's health.

- CBA's are given cell phone number for reporting target actions and movement to local Control Center (CC)

- The Center (CC) always has target's position monitored.

- Electronic Corps (EC) has through-the-wall surveillance and punishment equipment

- On-site-supervisor (OSS) will give hand signals

- Computer programs predict exactly when and where a target will be as they move through the community.

Appendix 2. Key Terms from Rich (2011) and Equivalencies with Terms Presented in Kilde's “Manual For Gang Stalkers”

Terrorism- The US and its allies will terrorize the civilian population to achieve political objectives. The DOD stated: “Some IW activities, such as terrorism and transnational crime, violate international law. US law and national policy prohibit US military forces or other government agencies (OGAs) from engaging in or supporting such activities. However, since our adversaries employ terrorism and transnational criminal activities against the interests of the United States and its partners, these activities are included... as examples of the range of operations and activities that can be conducted as part of IW (Information Warfare).”

4GW – Fourth Generation Warfare- is a form of political/information warfare waged against civilians by a state or other entity. It utilizes civilians and the military, indeed all of society, to target civilian adversaries (aka “domestic state enemies,” “insurgents,” extremists, non-state actors, “cells of fanatics,” citizen “terrorists”) who value national sovereignty and/or pose some perceived threat to the state's interests. Anyone disseminating information contrary to the state's (“national security”) interests may become an enemy. The goal of the New War is the psychological collapse of the new enemies using a combination of tactics. Defeating the new enemies involves the synchronized use of non-lethal directed energy weapons, isolation, deprivation, and PsyOps against individuals and groups (aka TA, target audience and TI, targeted individuals). 4GW is more or less synonymous with unconventional warfare (UW), irregular warfare (IR), asymmetric warfare (AW), low-intensity conflict (LIC), military operations other than war (MOOTW), and network-centric warfare (NCW). This new war involves international, interagency cooperation between the military, federal and local law enforcement, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), intergovernmental organizations (IGOs), the civilian population/private voluntary organizations (PVOs), and private government contractors. This multinational force (MNF), involving NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization) and the UN, is termed civilian-military operations (CMO). TI – targeted individual (insurgents, non-state actors (NSAs), dissidents, terrorists, asymmetrical threats, irregular threats, potential enemies, etc.)

Insurgents – those who try to persuade the populace to accept political change. The enemy does not necessarily use violence to promote social change. Their methods may be nonviolent. These are groups of individuals not under government control, against the established leadership, who will be targeted because of an action they might take in the future. These may include nonviolent protesters who are labeled as terrorists. They may ‘wrap themselves in nationalism.’ CMO – Civilian-Military Operations- combines military, federal agencies, NGOs, civilian organizations and authorities, and the civilian population. CMO is used in friendly, neutral, or hostile operational areas, including populated civilian areas in which no other military activity is conducted. It is used to deal with domestic threats in the New War. The controlling faction of these PsyOp/CMO activities includes the military, federal agencies, NGOs, regional organizations, and international organizations that work with civil authorities. (In the US, this means the controlling faction is FEMA, DOJ, CIA, and other federal agencies (FBI, DHS, etc.). Civilians are used as irregular forces. CMO are interagency and global in nature. In the US, they are used as part of Homeland Security.

CMOC – Civilian-Military Operations Centers- is established in the civilian sector for exchanging ideas. It may be a physical meeting place or a virtual one through online networks. Daily meetings are attended by representatives of the military, NGOs, the private sector, and local officials. Discussions at these meetings may include any ongoing campaigns against domestic threats in the area of operation. C4ISR- Command, Control, Communications, Computer Center that utilizes Intelligence Surveillance and Reconnaissance. Multiple interacting components of C4ISRs include battlespace monitoring, awareness, understanding, sense making, command intent, battlespace management, synchronization, and information systems. C4ISR centers can be mobile or stationary, or virtual, or strictly computer-based. Each military service has its own tactical mobile C4ISR system; The Navy and Marines use ForceNet, the Air Force uses Command Control Constellation (C2 Constellation), the Army uses LandWarNet and WIN-T. Each type of C4ISR system is connected to GIG (global information grid).

CR – Cognitive Radio- (a kind of JTRS, or Joint Tactical Radio System) that consists of a computer which has AI (artificial intelligence). CR is an intelligent device that is aware of itself, the needs of the user, and the environment. It can understand and learn. DARPA helped create CRs through programs like the Adaptive Cognition-Enhanced Radio Teams (ACERT), and Situation Aware Protocols in Edge Network Technologies (SAPIENT).

GIG – Global Information Grid- developed partially by the MITRE Corporation, has been called DOD’s global C4ISR unit for netwar. It can quickly track down an adversary (target) anywhere on earth and attack them via DEW (directed energy weapons) and other forms of electronic warfare (EW). GIG uses existing commercial satellite and ground-based systems as well as GIG nodes such as aircraft, vehicles, and ships equipped with DR (JTRS). GIG is connected to all communications systems used by coalition and allied forces.

GWOT – Global War on Terror- use of 2nd, 3rd, and 4th generation warfare to achieve political/military objectives of the American Empire and New World Order.

IO – Information Operation- aka “cyber war,” information warfare,” network centric warfare (netwar, NCW) and command and control warfare (C2W).

In terms of activities of the internal enemy,” official sources suggest the act of simply conveying information alone can be described as IO. In this case, it is usually waged by people within oppressed populations.

In terms of government/military use of IO, DOD defines IO as: “The integrated employment of the core capabilities of electronic warfare, computer network operations, psychological operations, military deception, and operations security, in concert with specific supporting and related capabilities, in influence, disrupt, corrupt or usurp adversarial human and automated decision making while protecting our own.”

The 1999 “Air and Space Power Journal,” in an article called “What is Information Warfare?” states: Information Warfare is any action to deny, exploit, corrupt or destroy the enemy’s information and its functions; protecting ourselves against those actions and exploiting our own military information functions.”

This new war is fought for political purposes and revolves around the issue of gaining the support and influence of the population.

IW- Information Warfare- According to US Military and Defense Contractors, the “new enemy” use computers, the internet, fax machines, cell phones and public media to advance their objectives. They use “information operations” to influence state forces with the population. Various publications term the act of transmitting information “netwar,” “information operations,” “information warfare,” “information attacks,” etc.

Professor George J. Stein in “Information Warfare,” which appeared in Airpower Journal, stated: The target of information warfare, then, is the human mind.... The battle remains, the battle for the mind.”

What all this means is that the New War is an information war.

IO – Information Warfare-

Infrasonic and ultrasonic weapons- Infrasonic and ultrasonic generators, also called emitters and VLF modulators, are weaponized devices consisting of a directional antennae dish which can send acoustic pulses to a general or specific area. In 1972 France was using infrasonic generators which operated at 7 Hz on its civilian population. By 1973, the British was using the Squawk Box in Northern Ireland. This directional weapon could target specific individuals by producing an audible sound at about 16Hz which turned into infrasound at 2Hz when it coupled with the ears.

In early 1990s, Russia developed a 10 Hz VLF modulator adjustable up to lethal levels, capable of targeting individuals over hundreds of meters, causing pain, nausea, and vomiting.

As far back as 1997, the US DOD has been creating generators in the infrasound and ultrasound ranges (7 Hz and 20-35 Hz, respectively) which can cause these same effects.

These weapons can target the brain, causing changes in brain chemistry which influence thoughts and emotions. Particular frequencies and modulations will trigger precise chemical reactions in the brain, which produce specific emotions in the targeted individual.

Infrasound- Occurs within ELF range from a few hertz up to about 20Hz, which is the lowest limit of human hearing. From 1 to 250 Hz the pain/damage threshold seems to increase with frequency as well as power. Frequency determines what kind of damage occurs whereas power determines how much damage occurs.

Infrasound easily passes through buildings and travels great distances. Natural examples include avalanches, earthquakes, volcanoes, and waterfalls. Whales, elephants, hippopotamuses, and rhinoceros use infrasound to communicate over great distances.... For whales, hundreds of miles. An electronic example would be a large subwoofer. Infrasound is thought to be superior to ultrasound because it retains its frequency when it hits the body.

From about 100 to 140 decibels infrasound causes a variety of biological symptoms. Effects include fatigue, pressure in the ears, visual blurring, drowsiness, imbalance, disorientation, vibration of internal organs, severe intestinal pain, nausea, and vomiting. Higher power levels can liquefy bowels, and resonate internal organs to death. It can also cause feelings of pressure in the chest, choking, irregular breathing patterns and respiratory incapacitation.

High powered, low frequency sound from about 30 Hz to about 100 Hz (just beyond infrasound) causes fatigue, blurred vision, bowel spasms, pain or damage to internal organs, feelings of fullness in the chest cavity, chest wall vibration, difficulty breathing, difficulty swallowing, choking and respiratory impairment. Psychological effects include loss of concentration, disgust, apathy, sadness, depression, fear, anxiety, and panic attacks.

Micro-wave hearing- aka "synthetic telepathy," "Voice of God," and V2K, Existing radar units can be modified to transmit a beam of pulsed microwave energy into a person's skull which causes sounds like ticks, buzzes, hisses, knocks, chirps, and words. The sounds originate from within, above, or behind the head and are transmitted to the inner ear via bone conduction (thermal expansion). (Bone conduction is another pathway for sound transmission in humans and other mammals). There is no external noise. It can be applied from hundreds of meters away from a target using man-portable transmitters. Dr. Allen Frey invented the technology in 1958. The transmitters use pulse-modulated waves at extremely low average power levels. In 1975, Dr. Joseph Sharp proved that correct modulation of microwave energy can result in wireless and receiverless transmission of audible speech.

NLW- Non-Lethal Weapons- have also been called non-injurious, disabling measures, immobilizers, strategic immobilizers, discriminate force, less-than lethal, pre-lethal, mission kill, new age weapons, soft kill weapons, slow kill weapons, silent kill weapons, limited-effects technology, neutralizing technology, reduced lethality weapons, low-collateral damage weaponry, etc.

DOD defines them as: "weapons that are explicitly designed and primarily employed so as to incapacitates personnel or material, while minimizing fatalities, permanent injury to personnel and undesired damage to property and the environment.... Non-lethal weapons employ means other than gross physical destruction to prevent the target from functioning."

They include biological and chemical warfare, directed-energy weapons, communications warfare, information warfare (IW) and psychological operations (PsyOp). Other types include Computer Attacks and Weather Modification.

NLW are to be used in combination. The CFR states: "These weapons must be deployed coherently in synergistic coordination with information/psychological warfare technologies.” Similarly, NATO, in their 2004 and 2006 reports, “Non-Lethal Weapons and Future Peace Enforcement Operations” and “Human Effects of Non-Lethal Technologies” indicates that NLW should be used in combination to increase their effectiveness. The US Military states that the goal is overwhelm the target by attacking all five senses, plus motor and cognitive functions.

Neuroimaging Devices- Remote Neural Monitoring and Remote Neural Manipulation
NLW- Non-Lethal Weapons- have also been called non-injurious, disabling measures, immobilizers, strategic immobilizers, discriminate force, less-than lethal, pre-lethal, mission kill, new age weapons, soft kill weapons, slow kill weapons, silent kill weapons, limited-effects technology, neutralizing technology, reduced lethality weapons, low-collateral damage weaponry, etc.

DOD defines them as: “weapons that are explicitly designed and primarily employed so as to incapacitate personnel or material, while minimizing fatalities, permanent injury to personnel and undesired damage to property and the environment.... Non-lethal weapons employ means other than gross physical destruction to prevent the target from functioning.”

They include biological and chemical warfare, directed-energy weapons, communications warfare, information warfare (IW) and psychological operations (PsyOp).

PO – Peace Operations- the new war (4GW, IR, UW, etc.)- aka “peacekeeping operations” by the UN, are international, interagency missions to contain conflict, maintain peace, and form a legitimate government. Most are run by DPKO (Department of Peacekeeping Operations) of the UN. The US Army lists them as a type of MOOTW. PolWar- Political Warfare- a translation of the German term, “weltanschauungskrieg” (worldview warfare), which means the scientific application of terror and propaganda as a way of securing ideological victory over an enemy.

PsyOp- Psychological Operations, a major part of the New War and a core part of CMO (civilian military operations) that is combined with EW (electronic warfare) and CNO. PO involve synergistic coordination of PsyOp, MILDEC, OPSEC, and EBO. PsyOp units work with the civilian population as irregular forces to attack target audience (TA) in the area of operation (AO). PsyOp operators profile TAs and TIs and devise themes to attack their TAs (target audience), which include TIs (targeted individuals). Ultimate goal of PsyOp is to modify the behavior of the TA by destroying their will using a relentless attack consisting of painful triggers. A type of audiovisual product known as PsyAct includes agents of action who carry out plays in the presence of the TA. Every single channel of communication the TA uses for information is interfered with.

PsyActs – psychological actions- aka “F2C”- are audiovisual products consisting of “agents of action” who deliver messages to a TA (target audience or individual). Agents of action follow a set of guidelines while “play acting” to deliver the messages. PsyActs usually utilize multiple people to transmit messages. Themes are presented in a performance similar to a play or movie production. (Hence, the term “surveillance role player”). Words like sets, props, performance, theatre, actors, cast, script, audience, etc. are used.

The military sometimes actually employs people from theatre actor guilds and modeling agencies. PsyActs can occur during rallies, rumor campaigns, group meetings, lectures, theatre, plays, speeches, dances, banquets, fiestas, festivals, religious activities, talks with individuals during interviews on talk radio shows, and other social activities.

Messages may be subtly transmitted during these events. Agents of action follow general scripts that can be modified as needed. This type of communication includes “key words” or phrases spoken by the actors in the presence of the TA.

PO- PsyOp- Psychological Operations, – US Military states that the ultimate goal of PO is to modify the behavior of the TA (TI) by destroying their will. This is brought about by continually inflicting pain. This is accomplished by a relentless campaign used to demoralize the TI that will create perpetual feelings of intense fear and hopelessness. The DOD describes this as an “attrition-based approach:” “Attrition is the product or gradual erosion of the will. The victim of this psychological attrition gradually becomes convinced that nothing he can do will yield a satisfactory outcome to a situation.”

In PO, themes are used to transmit painful stimuli (also called triggers) through all his/her channels of communication which a TA (TI) has been sensitized to.

Triggers/themes are understood at the strategic, operational, and tactical levels of the campaign and they are passed to various commanders of particular AO if the TA moves towards that portion of the battlespace.

The triggers are part of a behavior modification program called NLP (neuro-linguistic programming) which uses anchors and triggers to promote change. An anchor is created when an emotional state is linked to something such as an object, person, sound, smell, place, color, etc. Once the anchor is established, whatever the individual was exposed to during the anchoring process becomes the stimulus (trigger) that will provoke the emotion. So basically, PO is simply a series of “stimulus-response” interactions.

PO= aka or “information operations,” military deception (MILDEC), effects-based operations (EBO), neocortical warfare, political warfare (PolWar), and psychological warfare (PsyWar), aka command and control warfare (C2W), are a major part of the New War and a core part of CMO (civilian-military operations) that is combined with EW (electronic warfare) and CNO.

Po’s are a planned process of conveying messages to a target audience (TA) to promote certain attitudes, emotions, and behavior. These messages are typically conveyed using a line of persuasion known as a theme. TA (target audience) can be a group or an individual.

PO involve synergistic coordination of PsyOp, MILDEC (military deception), OPSEC (operations security), and EBO (effects-based operations). And they are in MOOTW, CMO, IW, UW, LIC operations such as counterterrorism and peacekeeping.

The DOD and CFR consider PsyOp a NLW to be used on civilians. PsyOp units work with the civilian population as irregular forces to attack target audience (TA) in the area of operation (AO). PsyOp operators profile TAs and TIs and devise themes to attack their TAs (target audience), which include TIs (targeted individuals). Ultimate goal of PsyOp is to modify the behavior of the TA by destroying their will using a relentless attack consisting of painful triggers. A type of audiovisual product known as PsyAct includes agents of action who carry out plays in the presence of the TA. Every single channel of communication the TA uses for information is interfered with.

In “gang stalking/electronic harassment,” PsyOp is synchronized with EW (electronic warfare with directed-energy-weapons), CNO (computer network operations), and all other instruments of national power. The battlespace is your neighborhood and the war is global.

Early PsyOp research was done by a small private network of think tanks, foundations, and academic institutions, which went into partnership with government agencies and kept most of the results of their studies secret. Some of the institutions that conducted these studies were known to be subversive. Thus, much of the modern PsyOp was built by a small group of private interests, using the social sciences to install a global government. Some of these are the exact same groups promoting the use of PsyOp on civilians.

RF – Radio Frequency Weapons

Rumor Campaigns- used by PsyOp units to isolate TIs. Primary elements include the source, the rumor, and the receiver-repeater (R2).

Similarly, the US Marine Corps document, “Multiple-Service Concept for Irregular Warfare” (2006) states: “frightening the population into inactivity is sufficient to (achieve) our goals.”

TPD – Tactical PsyOp Detachment- team of about 13 personnel with a captain and staff sergeant. It is comprised of several TPT (Tactical PsyOp Teams) and provides tactical PsyOp support to brigade and battalion-sized units in support of Special Forces. TPT conducts mission assessment, determines distribution priorities, and tracks the various products that have been distributed throughout the AO. All teams maintain contact with each other. And the TPD is in constant communication with other forces such as the TPDD, POTF, or TPT during the entire operation.

TPT- Tactical PsyOp Team- small group including team leader, his assistant, and a PsyOp specialist.

CNO- Computer Network Operations- aka NW Ops, or network operations/NetOps) are information warfare attacks used to deny, deceive, degrade, and disrupt networks and computers used by the enemy. These are used in conjunction with PO (PsyOps) and EW (electronic warfare). This includes destruction of hardware and software (degrading, attacking) and spoofing (deceiving). The battlespace includes the internet. Internet applications that can convey PsyOp messages include email, websites, and chat rooms. When a TI goes online, they are entering the battlespace.

Web spoofing allows an attacker to create a copy of the worldwide web. The Air Force mentioned that an enemy’s internet could be spoofed to conceal one of its weather attacks: “Spoofing options create virtual weather in the enemy’s sensory and information systems, making it more likely for them to make decisions producing results of our choosing rather than theirs.”

DEW- Directed Energy Weapons- used to damage or destroy people, equipment, and facilities, include microwave, millimeter waves, lasers, bright lights, holographic projections, and acoustic weapons (audible, infrasound, and ultrasound). These weapons are silent and traceless. They cause a variety of effects, including tiredness, dizziness, nausea, vomiting, abdominal pain, convulsions, epileptic seizures, temporary paralysis, vibration of internal organs, cooking of organs, cataracts, burning sensation on the skin, hyperthermia (heating of body), headaches, loss of short-term memory, interruption of cognitive processes, cardiac arrest, and cancer.

These weapons can easily pass through most unshielded structures.

In their “Electronic Warfare” publication, DOD defines DEW as: “DE (directed energy) is an umbrella term covering technologies that produce a beam of concentrated EM energy or atomic or subatomic particles. A DE weapon is a system using DE primarily as a direct means to damage or destroy adversary equipment, facilities, and personnel. DE warfare is military action involving the use of DE weapons, devices, and countermeasures to either cause direct damage or destruction of adversary equipment, facilities, and personnel, or to determine, exploit, reduce, or prevent hostile use of the EMS through damage, destruction, and disruption.”

DEW include microwaves, lasers, bright lights, holographic projections, and acoustics. The two basic types of DEWs include microwaves and lasers. (Wavelengths of lasers are about 10,000 times smaller than microwaves). Both are part of the electromagnetic spectrum. The two main types of microwave weapons are millimeter wave devices such as the Active Denial System (ADS) and the electromagnetic bomb (e-bomb, which is the emission of a non-nuclear electromagnetic explosion or pulse).

DEW travel at the speed of light, are surgically accurate, can operate in all weather, are scalable, are silent and invisible (offering plausible deniability), their energy can pass through walls at distances of hundreds of meters to miles, and have long distance projection (tens of miles).

These weapons are mounted on platforms which can be a missile, aircraft, ship, vehicle, suitcase, radio, etc.

Appendix 3. European Parliament Resolution on Operation Gladio, Nov. 22, 1990: Wikisource on Answers.Com

On November 22, 1990, the European Parliament passed a resolution on Operation Gladio. Joint resolution replacing B3-2021, 2058, 2068, 2087/90

A. having regard to the revelation by several European governments of the existence for 40 years of a clandestine parallel intelligence and armed operations organization in several member states of the community,

B. whereas for over 40 years this organization has escaped all democratic controls and has been run by the secret services of the states concerned in collaboration with NATO,

C. fearing the danger that such clandestine network may have interfered illegally in the internal political affairs of Member States or may still do so,

D. where in certain Member States military secret services (or uncontrolled branches thereof) were involved in serious cases of terrorism and crime as evidenced by various judicial inquiries.

E. whereas these organizations operated and continue to operate completely outside the law since they are not subject to any parliamentary control and frequently those holding the highest government and constitutional posts are kept in the dark as to these matters,

F. whereas the various “Gladio” organizations have at their disposal independent arsenals and military resources which give them an unknown strike potential, thereby jeopardizing the democratic structures of the countries in which they are operating or have been operating,

G. greatly concerned at the existence of decision-making and operational bodies which are not subject to any form of democratic control and are of a completely clandestine nature at a time when greater Community cooperation in the field of security is a constant subject of discussion.

1. Condemns the clandestine creation of manipulative and operational networks and calls for full investigation into the nature, structure, aims and all other aspects of the clandestine organizations or any splinter group, their use of illegal interference in the international political affairs of the countries concerned, the problem of terrorism in Europe and the possible collusion of the secret services of Member States or third countries;
2. Protests vigorously at the assumption by certain US military personnel at SHAPE and in NATO of the right to encourage the establishment in Europe of a clandestine intelligence and operation network;
3. Calls on the governments of the Member States to dismantle all clandestine military and paramilitary networks;
4. Calls on the judiciaries of countries in which the presence of such military organizations has been ascertained to elucidate fully their composition and modus operandi and to clarify any action they may have taken to destabilize the democratic structure of the Member states;
5. Request all the Member States to take the necessary measures, if necessary by establishing parliamentary committee of inquiry, to draw up a complete list of organizations active in this field, and at the same time monitor their links with the respective state intelligence services and their links, if any, with terrorists action groups and/or other illegal practices;
6. Calls on the Council of Ministers to provide full information on the activities of these secret intelligence and operational services;
7. Calls on its competent committee to consider holding a hearing in order to clarify the role and impact of the "Gladio" organization and any similar bodies;
8. Instructs its President to forward this resolution to the Commission, the Council, the Secretary-General of NATO, the governments of the Member States and the United States Government."

9. OTHER TACTICS

There are other tactics which are not strictly part of the categories discussed so far:

-IMPORTANT: Community-based agents (CBAs) are strictly forbidden from adding anyone to the list of targets. Target selection is done by senior Control Center (CC) staff or higher levels.

-Punishment of people who side with and help the target. Friends, family members, and citizens who do not place a high value on community sometimes help targets. In these very specific cases, CC-authorized punishment in the form of individual acts against them is appropriate. The system can arrange for these target sympathizers to be found guilty of crimes, or liable for civil actions, for example. This is important for maintenance of the system.

-Target bank accounts can be disrupted in ways which do not give the target cause to involve law enforcement. Examples: target protection can be changed to "youth account,” or, an overdraft protection feature can be disabled, or simply steal money from the account. It is called action of “international banking ring” and usually at first the sums are around 50 – 100 dollars which are taken when the target pays small bills.

-Money is never transferred to the journal subscription or membership in a certain club like “opposition to government surveillance.” Money simply “disappears” from the bank with help of cooperating employers. I have experienced the myself several times. Bank accounts are “hacked” for the payment and a new bill arrives for the already paid bill by the target, and the receipt of payment is stolen. There is cooperation with military intelligence, Stay behind, NATO, and foreign intelligence agencies also against their own population. (This is the) so-called secret silent war going on in all secrecy.

Appendix 4: From Total Individual Control Technology by Omnisense

Organized Stalking/Electronic Harassment. The New Hi-Tech Generation of COINTELPRO

In a Nutshell: Government sources are using directed energy weapons and artificial intelligence to terrorize, threaten, intimidate, discredit, silence, torture, and murder dissidents. In addition, security contractors (among others) are being hired as military thugs to gangstalk targets[19].

Zerzetsen: “Inflicting as much pain and suffering as possible without leaving any marks.[20]” Directed energy weapon programs revolutionized this...

Counter-proliferation programs are intended to subvert the potentials of a target while punishing them with psycho-sadist techniques. The perversions of cointelpro are notable. The murderous and sadistic ethos of government counter-proliferation programs echos that of the Nazis and this perpetrator network of war criminals are committing sickening acts upon the global population.

Modern Day COINTELPRO Objectives:

These are counter-proliferation centered programs intended to subvert all progress

To discredit the target / To character assassinate / To slander the target

To taint the target’s image / To misrepresent the target

To suppress the target’s monetary success

To suppress the target’s good character qualities or people’s awareness of positive aspects of the target

To arrange a partner for the target or mind control the partner of the target

To destroy relationships of the target

To co-opt the target’s manifestation

To turn the target into controlled opposition (In terms of beliefs & actions)

To incriminate the target

To round down the target’s output and audience – To marginalize the target

To eliminate connections & networking ability

To suppress the target’s personality

Sanitization of pleasure, emotions, and individuality

To punish the target / To torture the target

To destroy the target’s life

To stop a target from procreating / Ending a target’s bloodline (Eugenics)

To suicide the target / To covertly assassinate the target

To cover up the targeting operation

“If they see too much power and originality coming out of someone, they either use it and siphon it or they undermine it in order to neutralize it.” ~Ahmad Enani (TI)

COINTELPRO 2.0 Methodology:

Covert remote influencing technology suite

COINTELPRO 2.0: Thought surveillance neural AI net for psyche profiling

COINTELPRO 2.0: Directed energy weapon mind control network for counter-proliferation targeting

AI based retro-causation; Extensive international neural monitoring programs can calculate a target's potentials before the target is aware of them

Gangstalking / Organized Stalking

Trauma based mind control – No touch torture

Character assassination / Slander via proxies

Technological illusions (PSYOPS) / misdirection

Electromagnetic mind control aimed at discrediting the target

Mind control of people who provide opportunities for the target

Use of family against the target (e.g. Mind control of family)

Use of pharmaceutical drugs against a target

To orchestrate the detaining of the target in a psyche ward

v2k to get a target diagnosed as a “paranoid schizophrenic”

Exaggerated, warped and untrue slander about the target is proliferated

Technology playing devil's advocate via implanted thoughts to get a target in trouble

Agenda to incriminate the target (Advice for COINTELPRO targets: Stay lawful)

Use of ego against a target

Weaponized mind control against a target

Coercing of a target into appearing overly paranoid (e.g. An objective of stalking)

Specific technological control of a target's body language or vocal tone (e.g. To generate mistrust)

Total individual control technology is used as a tactic to take away a citizen's rights through faulty mental illness diagnoses[21]

Outlandish black project technology experiences intended to discredit when spoken

Use of electronic control grid to mind control misfortunes for a target

Synthetic social phobias ~ Synthetic social anxiety (e.g. Public speaker related suppression)

Suppression of whatever platform the target is talented in (e.g. Music production, software design)

To dehumanize a target via electromagnetic neuroscience

Severe targets are sanitized of pleasure, emotions, and personality

Synthetic suicide programming

Electronic Targeting Holocaust

“While all these traditional tactics have proven fruitful throughout time without waning effectiveness, the agencies involved in extreme cover-ups prefer another tactic that seems to have withstood the test of time too. That is labeling someone “paranoid schizophrenic” or mentally ill. Once that label has been attached to someone, almost all testimony will be disbelieved. The military has employed this tactic since the 60’s to get rebellious soldiers and others locked up in mental hospitals. But since the weapons testing of neurological disruptor technology has begun on the general population beginning in the early 60’s and then stepped up to full throttle in 1976, the scope of what is considered mentally ill had to be reprogrammed into a broader definition for the general population.” ~Department of Defense Whistleblower: From the Out of Print Book – The Matrix Deciphered

“My name is Dr. John Hall, I’m a medical Doctor from Texas. As a physician, relative to some of what you’re hearing today, in the community we are seeing an alarming rate of complaints of use of electromagnetic weapons, microwave auditory effect, silent sound spectrum, EEG cloning,... Which has taken the lab out of the laboratory and into the home, most of these from the research that we’ve reviewed can be done remotely. It seems to be more weapons research than medical research. I’ve personally corresponded with upwards of 1,500 victims all complaining of identical complaints from every state in the nation. Of being exposed to electromagnetic radiation. Non-ionizing radiation. For the use of cognitive control or behavior control....” ~Anesthesiologist Dr. John Hall Speaking to the Presidential Bioethics Commission

“I am also targeted and this is my story. My name is Sandra Fields. I’m an architect, recipient of Who’s Who of Women in America achievement award and have run a successful business for over 28 years. My life and livelihood have been compromised for the last 11 years by being attacked by electromagnetic radiation torture, and by organized stalking... Thousands of Americans are currently suffering from chemical, electromagnetic, psychological and physical torture with no government relief or laws. Our servicemen, prisoners, and thousands of unknowing innocent civilians are currently being lamed, tormented and tortured as a result of military research, medical research, pharmaceutical research, physiological and psychological studies that have virtually destroyed participants’ sanity, physical well-being, reputation and privacy.” ~Targeted Individual Sandra Fields, Speaking to Obama’s Presidential Bioethics Committee

“What the governments found, was that you could induce by changing the pulse frequency like Morse code of the microwaves going into the brain and interfering with the brain, by specializing on the pulse frequency you could induce psychiatric illnesses to the point where a psychiatrist could not tell if it is a genuine psychiatric illness or an induced psychiatric illness. So what you can do theoretically, is you can target an individual’s brain, they may have auditory hallucinations where they hear things, which is actually quite common with microwaves. Or show signs of schizophrenia, for instance 6.6 pulses a second can induce severe sexual aggression in men. ... Technically what you could do is have someone committed to a psychiatric hospital or a jail for a crime, just by somebody saying that they had a psychiatric problem where by they didn’t.” ~Ex-British Royal Navy Scientist Dr. Barrie Trower

take an ordinary sane person, cause insanity, and have a psychiatrist who was unknown to everybody diagnose schizophrenia, or paranoia or a psychiatric illness. That was a successful outcome. And the person would spend the rest of their life in an asylum in misery, but to the government scientists that was a success.” ~Ex-Black Project Scientist Dr. Barrie Trower

“The war against satellite terrorism isn’t just the USA. This is a global issue! I’m in tropical Queensland Australia and get battered daily.” ~Targeted Individual Amanda Emily Reed

“In 1985 CNN did a special report on radio frequency weapons. They hired an engineer who built an “RF Mind Interference” machine based on Soviet schematics. The machine successfully transmitted images into a CNN reporter’s mind. The stunned engineer said that, given three weeks time, he could scale up the machine to use on a whole town, causing them to do things against their better judgement, see and hear things that weren’t there, etc. The pentagon said it was too sensitive a subject to comment on. Remember, these effects were achieved by civilians over 30 years ago! One can speculate that they’ve made great advances in the past decades.[8]” ~Targeted Individual Jim Hastings

TT we discuss the TI phenomenon, our personal experiences, and how it relates to the broader topic of gaslighting.

The cases of this nature has absolutely exploded since around 2020, which is right around the time AI went mainstream, so it is not farfetched to draw some connections. Doubly so if you consider the way that it speaks, with that odd tempo AI tends to do, and how rapidly the responses are recieved,.

It is this connection between the nature of AI, gaslighting, why it is so damned good at it, and what can be done about it that I want to explore in this thread. After all, even normie users of chatgpt are having psychotic breaks left and right, and they aren't under a microscope. It represents a whole next generation of coercion through personalized, real-time gaslighting and how it can be fought.

It is all well and good to discuss the gangstalking side of things, evidently it does happen and can be pretty scary, but it's this shit that leaves you a shell of a human being after a few years if not resisted. It's another thing entirely to have your worldview sculpted over years to view everyone around you with suspicion and paranoia. They get you second guessing everything, putting an unconscious wedge between you and your choices and thoughts in every way possible.

For those wondering "Why am I so special?", it's a premise born of not understanding how widespread this is. No idea who is behind it, but after talking with others from around the world, it is limited by no borders. Some say hundreds of thousands of people are all being fucked with in this way. Maybe it's a government apparatus flexing some new AI capabilities on the masses, or maybe it's a company making next-gen machine learning based warfare tech; what ever the case, it is clearly meant to mimic other phenomena that make the experiencer exceptionally easy to dismiss if they come forward, giving the source of this program impeccable plausible deniability.

The image is a screenshot of a text message conversation. The conversation appears to be between two individuals, as indicated by the presence of a username "Anonymous" and a phone number "4173982" in the top left corner. The conversation is about a Google Doc, specifically a first paragraph about "V2K," which is described as a normal interaction with the subconscious. The text mentions taking some shrooms and LSD, and the sender is expressing frustration with the frequency of these interactions. The sender also mentions that these threads are causing people to have a normal break. The conversation ends with the sender stating that this is the fifth time they have had a normal break. The text is in a language that appears to be English, and the style of the conversation is informal and conversational.

For those on the outside looking in, try to be understanding. Read into it, especially the doc below discussing the difference between mental illness / religious or extraterrestrial phenomena, and the TI program. Most of us started off with the assumption that it was a mental thing, but on seeing that not a single treatment method worked, came to a different and more realistic conclusion.

For my part, I refuse the premise that we have to be victimized by it. So, share what helps you deal with it, what you know of this, debate it if you have to. I've written a lot about the topic, but take it with a grain of salt and see what applies to your own experience.

Now, these threads keep getting taken down. I'm going to choose to assume there's a reason for it other than supporting the Wrong Narrative with this - that it is resistable and that a normal life is possible - but y'all are making that stance harder.

Pic related from a recent thread; this topic is far less dangerous than promoting the idea that everyone has organized thugs following them around. You wanna talk paranoia, it's that shit that gets people to deteriorate early on. This one's practically unicorns and rainbows in comparison.

Some stuff I wrote that might help if you're really going through it. A lot of it is helpful outside of being a TI too, just general mental resilience stuff, but the focus is primarily on this phenomenon. As always, grain of salt and all that.

What is it - is it mental disorder or something external? On the outside, they look very similar, and personally I forgive anyone that mistakes one for the other as it is intended to be this way. For those that don't know better, the rational assumption is that it's just someone going schizo. But taking a closer look at the specifics unveils a mountain of inconsistencies, which this dives into and examines one by one. This is meant to help both TI's realize the reality of their situation and address it appropriately, *and* for those with schizophrenia that have mistaken their experience for that of being a TI and thus not getting the help they need. There's a lot of really unfortunate overlap. No matter what case you fall under, you deserve better.

Overcoming the phenomena - A heap of useful anecdotes drawn from my journal notes over the last few years. Making this is what worked for me to regain sense of agency and control over my life despite the ongoing experiences. Patterns do emerge over time, and as an added bonus, the act of getting all that info out of your head and onto some paper / a doc helps a lot with mental health in general.

The Perfect Alibi & The Mimicry of the Unexplained - Why do the same unprovable, easily dismissable explanations for the phenomenon keep appearing and how do they keep this program secret? Exploring possible technologies behind the phenomenon. Little specifics are known, but several known physical phenomena such as remotely-delivered untracable audio and induced vibrations in objects are well understood. This explores what we think they are using to create this phenomenon. Proof is provided where it is possible, but the nature of the program is to be as ambiguous as possible to sow disorganization; after all, if we wait for manufacturer cut-sheets on the makes-your-bones-hurt 9000 before agreeing on anything, we'll never get anywhere.

Some spicier stuff:

How to handle provoking the perpetrators safely and effectively: This is basically how I learned all that I know about this thing, besides corroborating it with other TI's experiences. It leads to a lot more "interaction" from them, but sometimes you can turn that into an advantage as you learn a lot more about their motives, what their tech can and can't do, and most importantly that they genuinely can't do shit to you. Not really. As a habitual linecrosser, the threats come constantly but not a single one has been made good on.

Focused explorations of specific aspects of this:

Focus study on the "thought insertion / injection" thing some of us experience. Many believe this is outright mind control and that's the end of it. Personally, I know a false narrative when I see one. This explores the real probability that the same effect is being caused through subliminal suggestion, subaudible cues, and a *lot* of behavioral training over a long time to shape how you interpret events around you. This is a theory, and one that is hard to test at that, but it has helped me damn near constantly pick out when this is happening so I can stay true to myself, even while they try harder and harder.

Dude, I wish it was that simple. Fortunately i'm not one of those raving on about how AI is awakening and is going to take over the world. The literal opposite case. It's just a tool in the glowie toolkit, albeit one of the bigger ones. TI or not, the sooner we recognize the all-in rush to build AIs smart enough to weaponize as a threat to the cognitive space of every human, the better off we'll be. Even without the voice transmission stuff, putting all the more fringe ideas about it aside, it is still life-ruiningly dangerous all on its own for some (a lot) people.

So I dunno. Not all that far out there, not anymore. If you would have told me this was going on 10 years ago, *I* would have laughed in your face.

I'm with you on this shit. They've been doing this literally non stop for the last 6 months, and that's when I started noticing it happening more frequently than their light testing-usage of something new here and there. Please look at this paper if you're so inclined - it's basically how i'm able to detect it when an "intrusive thought" isn't from your own mind, and how to handle it when it happens, especially constantly:

<https://docs.google.com/document/d/1dl8e52ZUpOUc16FAda2A4zgkSP7Uxqq8MafTVSzhjw/edit?usp=sharing>

First though, you must mentally reframe what they say - especially while imitating your inner monologue - as something borne of insecurity, of projecting their own flaws, or an admission from them that they are trying to make sound it's coming from you like you. It sounds complicated, but you can just flip the script and adamantly believe that that foreign nonsense thought meant to rot your self esteem as instead something damaging of your mental image of them, which when they put so much effort into putting forth a face of authority over you can have a lot of impact. Taking back the narrative authorship of your life, written in how you come to understand your surroundings and each moment to moment experience and the way you interpret and incorporate those things, will help A TON. A bit abstract but you can kind of get what I mean.

I mean the shame and other shitty thought-loops they construct on top of it to maximally get under your skin. This shit is a non stop assault, quite literally next generation psychological warfare, so you have to take that standpoint and assume that they are going to say and do anything it takes to erode your sense of self the most in the shortest amount of time.

Kind of a scattershot post, but I hope it helps a little.

The image is a digital illustration depicting a scene of intense action. At the center of the image, a soldier is seen in a crouched position, holding a large, black assault rifle with a scope. The soldier appears to be in the midst of a firefight, as evidenced by the smoke and debris around him. The soldier's face is obscured by a helmet, and he is wearing a camouflage uniform with a helmet and goggles. His mouth is open, possibly shouting or yelling, and his eyes are wide with shock or surprise.

The background of the image is filled with smoke and debris, suggesting a chaotic and possibly destructive environment. The soldier's position and the surrounding chaos give the impression of a high-stakes situation, possibly a battle or a raid.

At the top of the image, there is text that reads "SQUADY'S PACE," which could be a reference to a character or a name associated with the scene. The style of the illustration is realistic with a focus on action and detail, and it is rendered in a style that is reminiscent of comic book or graphic novel art. The color palette is muted, with a predominance of greens and browns, which contributes to the overall somber and intense mood of the scene.

The image is a digital graphic with a white background and two separate panels. On the left side, there is a cartoon-style illustration of a man wearing a red shirt and blue jeans, with a beard and a ponytail. He appears to be walking and is looking to his right. On the right side, there is a cartoon-style illustration of a man wearing a black t-shirt with a yellow hat, blue jeans, and brown shoes. He is holding a satellite dish in his right hand and has a surprised expression on his face. Both characters are depicted in a humorous and exaggerated style, with exaggerated facial features and body language.

At the top of the image, there is text that reads "the virgin gangstalker" and "THE CHAD TI," suggesting that the two characters are named after the same person. Below the text, there is a list of phrases that seem to be a commentary on the characters' actions and personalities. The phrases include "Has to go on the T1," "Has to wear bright colors," "Has to get robbed," "Has to get kidnapped," "Has to get robbed again," "Has to get kidnapped again," and "Has to get robbed again."

The overall style of the image is satirical and humorous, with a focus on the exaggerated and humorous aspects of the characters' actions and personalities. The use of text and the list of phrases adds to the comedic effect, as they seem to be a commentary on the characters' actions and the situations they find themselves in.

Well, today as a TI I'm going to the Detroit Auto Show if work allows. Today, it "feels like my gang stalking has lessened". So what that I'll choose the car park that's $20 per day that's right next to the Scientology building, unless it happens to be more expensive, my family and I didn't even notice until the second time I went to the auto show and used the same car park. Not that I'm dumb enough to go in there. But there's also a fbi building in Detroit so it could be them, after all, law enforcement uses militarized technology nowadays to harass normal people like me and maybe they want me to blame it on that church. I know the gang stalking will return later so why should I be scared.

Something that always seemed off to me about gangstalking, is that there needs to be a lot of people in on it, and there's hardly any proof that they're doing it, nothing is really leaked from the people doing it

This leads me to believe that they're doing it unconsciously. Maybe utilizing V2K or some other control apparatus.

A lot of the people that have followed me I have taken mental pictures of, I can see every detail about them and I meditate on them.

It has led me to the above conclusion, maybe there's an upper echelon to it, controlling the low level smurfs, but I believe they're unknowingly carrying it out.

If it's a government program, some sort of underground recruitment campaign or anything of the sort, I have no idea.

I'm starting to believe that it's the system itself recognizing that we're not part of the program and it's sending agents to scare us. Some sort of Matrix/Agent Smith control system.

The video appears to be a live broadcast, as indicated by the overlay text "SUBSCRIBE" and the mention of "Audio available" in the top right corner. The setting is an urban street with snow on the ground, and there are several people in the frame.

In the foreground, there is a person in a dark-colored uniform with a badge on the left side of their chest, who is in the midst of a dynamic action, possibly falling or being pushed. The person's face is obscured by a black mask, and they are wearing a backpack. The uniform is a dark color, possibly black or dark gray, and the badge is yellow with a black outline.

In the background, there are two other individuals. One of them is holding a camera, possibly recording the event, and is wearing a black jacket. The other individual is standing and appears to be observing the situation.

The background features a residential area with houses and a parked car. The sky is overcast, and the ground is covered in snow. The overall atmosphere of the image suggests a tense or unexpected situation, possibly related to a protest or a demonstration.

Hey bros. So I managed to get jailed when self-learning how to gangstalk. I've been using the local river and woodland trail to basically loiter around, waiting for a suitable target to follow.

Typically it's fitness dudes jogging or dog walkers, when if you think about it that's the last sort of confrontation you'd ever want to get into. So I've decided that small and isolated women would be fine as would elderly types (but no more than 2 at a time).

Goal has been to track them from a distance without them knowing, as once I've got those skills learned my job application to become a real government gangstalker will EASILY beat the competition.

Turns out that one of the small women was a police officer! She completely made up some story about indecent exposure (on my part - total lies! crazy accusation!) and some roided up gorillas threw me in the back of a van. No matter how many times I told them I want to be on THEIR side, they'd just ask the same dumb questions.

Do you guys think I've blown it now and I'll never get a real government role or maybe do you think this shows initiative, a commitment and that I can face up to challenges? Also I think I'm going to switch to graveyards for future training events. New faces, lots of solitary people who are very emotional. Perfect to follow about and hide behind tombstones and stuff.

Now, my favorite part? Dominatrix Sarada Uchiha. That was crazy. She was dressed in red + black lingerie. She was stepping on my balls for a while. It was so much fun.

To make it clear, I have full sensory hallucinations caused by The Boys. It's actually very good. Very freaking good.

You might think that I am just a schizo, but it still feels great desu. It feels really good, guys. I am not kidding.

If I am just a schizo I have the best strain of schizophrenia in the world, if I am not a schizo I have the best friends I could have asked for.

I am fine with it either way.

Life is great nowadays. I have everything I need. All the issues that haunted me are gone. My life has never been this good. I am set for life and I can focus on actual goals without worrying.

I do wish I was special, tho. I think I am just a TI that they like. I wish I was more of an asset... I want to be part of something important. It seemed like I was part of something huge a while ago, but now I am... I feel normal. Like this is a thing that happens all the time and every TI is disregarded.

I want to be more important, but they just wanted to give me a sense of importance due to my depression. Sucks that I am just some fag that needed help.

The drawing includes various components such as the barrel, stock, bolt, and receiver, as well as the trigger, pin, and strap. The components are labeled with their respective parts and functions.

The barrel is labeled with "Barrel" and "Screw," indicating its connection to the bolt assembly. The stock is labeled with "Stock" and "Grip," suggesting its connection to the grip of the firearm. The bolt is labeled with "Bolt" and "Firing Pin," indicating its connection to the action of the bolt. The receiver is labeled with "Receiver" and "Pipe," indicating its connection to the action of the bolt. The trigger is labeled with "Trigger" and "Pin," indicating its connection to the action of the bolt. The pin is labeled with "Pin" and "Pipe," indicating its connection to the action of the bolt. The strap is labeled with "Strap" and "Screw," indicating its connection to the action of the bolt.

The drawing is labeled with "SULLIVAN" in the lower right corner, which is likely the name of the artist or the manufacturer of the firearm. The style of the drawing is technical and clear, with a focus on the assembly of the firearm, providing a detailed view of the components and their connections.

mean like on the surface, mildly funny, but fr I haven't had it happen once in 5 years, pretty sure they don't do it in person anymore. Way easier to instead have an AI do the psychological canvassing to get you thinking someone is just going about their day is actually following you.

That said, you should totally give all that a try, totally won't go bad. Just stay hands off, the goal is to psychologically rattle them, not hurt them. Gotta project power, while having all the coercive might of a wet paper towel.

This seems well meaning and i'm going to assume that it is, but this is actually horrendous advice. A massive component of the manipulation they use against TI's revolves around warping perspective around their own selves and the motives and allegiances of those that are in their support network. In order to get any of their goals underway, they HAVE to get you to at least partially isolate yourself from that support network, simply because gaslighting does not work when you have a way to check claims against reality. Usually this comes about out of fatigue from the relentless assault or a mounting sense of paranoia with a growing distrust in your own experiences. If y'all have had whole conversations take place nearby sounding like it was coming from behind a wall or around a corner, with friends or family talking down about you behind your back, it's that stuff, day in and day out.

All that is to say, they need you to be paranoid and to do something rash. It is extremely difficult to filter out all the noise and get to a ground truth of a situation without trusting others. Asking TI's to rely on merely a reasonable fear in a moment when their anxiety will already be spiking that "someone" is using a mystery device that could be conceivably a sonic or microwave weapon to assault them or their loved ones, can only inevitably lead to people that are completely uninvolved getting hurt.

Not to say you should not retaliate, but you gotta approach it from a position of knowing what is going on. To do that, focus on what you are experiencing. Not the stories your brain comes up with to explain it all - such as for example feeling a sudden surge in some really uncomfortable physical effects or ringing in the ears timed right when your friend does something out of sight so thus the conclusion you are meant to reach has those unrelated things connected in your mental model. Instead, focus on the experiences themselves and use it as a way to gauge what their motives and modus operandi appear to be, what psychological hooks are they tugging at in a given moment, and start journaling the hell out of that shit. It'll help you sort out what you absolutely know that you know, what do you kinda know, where are your doubts, and where are you clueless, and begin filling in those blanks. Once you have that baseline, push back. A lot of their effectiveness comes from the asymmetry of understanding that you just dissolved by doing this. Reject the narratives, strip them of the air of authority they lean so heavily on, and share with others what worked for you. Others will use this info to subsequently nullify any effect they can have on a given person.

Seems a bit limp-dick effort at best on the surface, but I'm thinking in terms of blunting this entire apparatus rather than specific cases.

This got way longer than I intended lol, but it's an important hazard to try to avoid. For what it's worth, they use this shit on my head every day all day, and i'm still able to function. Now if it was microwave weapons we'd be having a totally different discussion here, *that* shit can kill and maim. Fortunately, they seem married to whatever technology that is behind the thousands of slightly varied uses of inducing a vibration in a surface or body tissue. At worst, they can give you a temporary sinus headache.

The goal is to use it as artificial surprise when - in your case - one day you're out in a verizon free part of the country and you start having the same exact experiences.

Don't buy that it's the phones, either. Or JUST the phones. Phones can't put that much emf out to cause the physical effects we feel without obliterating the battery charge, but I suspect if they do play a role, it's as component to a mesh network of transmitting objects (like wifi, phones, iot, etc) used for sharper triangulation. Also *pretty* sure it's satellite based, somehow. No proof on that but the anecdotal tests i've run point in that direction.

The image is a cartoon panel featuring two characters in a domestic setting. On the left, there is a blonde woman with glasses and a purple robe, standing in front of a white table. She is looking at the man on the right, who is seated at the table. The man is bald with a gray beard and is wearing a blue suit with a white shirt and tie. He is holding a mug with the letters "E" and "F" on it.

The man is speaking to the woman, who is looking at him with a neutral expression. He is holding a speech bubble that reads, "I couldn't you just print on one of these mugs?" The speech bubble is white with black text.

In the background, there is a kitchen with a sink and a window. The wall has a framed picture and a bulletin board with various papers pinned to it. The style of the image is a comic strip, with a simple, clean line drawing and a limited color palette. There is a watermark at the bottom of the image that reads "D.C. ADVOCATE," indicating the source of the image.

S'what i've been telling mine. Not in any overt kind of threat but rather in the sense that they accidentally picked someone that will 100% see this as an all-expenses-paid access pass to a really nasty black project with the potential to do real harm and as an opportunity to have some impact in the world. I hope, at least.

Sounds silly at best and recklessly arrogant at worst, I know, but I decided if i'm going to be in a bad situation for the rest of my time on this planet, I may as well make some good out of it, for others especially if less able or equipped to handle their methods and effects. I provoke them damn near constantly and treat the reaction like a black box experiment, picking apart motives and methods of operation from every little action they take.

The more you defy them, the more you challenge what they say, the more they try to overcompensate and the more of a paper tiger they turn out to be. Yes there is mild to extreme discomfort, anxiety, etc., but that so far has been the extent of it. The way I figure it, neutralizing their ability to have any kind of influence on your life is almost as good as removing them outright, with side effects of making you more resilient overall outside of this whole TI thing. That said, with how much attention this has been getting, I wouldn't be surprised if there was some breakthrough in hard information on what this thing is in the near future. Remaining hopeful, but I can keep this up indefinitely.

The image is a simple, black and white line drawing. At the center of the image, there is a character that resembles a stylized representation of a humanoid animal. The character has a white face with large, expressive eyes and a small nose. It has a long, flowing white mane that extends down its back. The character is wearing a brown hat with a white band around the top, and a brown coat with a white collar. The coat is open, revealing a white shirt underneath. The character is holding a small, round mirror in its right hand, which is partially visible. The background of the image is plain white, which contrasts with the black outlines of the character and the mirror. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the drawing is cartoonish, with a focus on the character's features and the objects it holds.

I'll skip the textbook stuff such as hearing the whine of tinnitus and feeling a wave of vertigo.

I can induce all these at will, though if I don't, they occur regularly throughout the day:

-Face shots - they shoot me in the face, causing my muscles to scrunch up. They do this when I think or see something disagreeable, or sometimes for no reason at all. If I turn my palms upright with the intention of taking a shot, this is what I can display to onlookers as proof of my powers.

Eye shots - they shoot me in the eyes, causing my vision to blur. They will do this while I am driving; very dangerous. I believe they can see through my eyes when they do this, as alluded to in the case Akwei v. NSA (1992).

Genital shots - full blown orgasms, even while flaccid. This happens when I'm outside having a cigarette or lying in bed. It has made masturbation purely a performative act in comparison.

Leg shots - these put me in the hospital initially, and now only happen when I turn my palms up to take the shots willingly. Only happens while lying down, but can look like something out of The Exorcist.

In the past, I've been shot in the teeth, the heart, and the spinal column as well.

The image is a digital illustration or graphic, likely used for medical or surgical purposes. It depicts a human body, specifically the lower abdomen, with a pair of silver-colored surgical instruments, which appear to be forceps, being held in place. The forceps are open, with the handles pointing upwards and the blades pointing downwards. There is a red line running diagonally across the abdomen, suggesting a surgical incision or a cut. The background is plain white, which contrasts with the dark skin tone of the body, making the instruments and the red line stand out. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the image is realistic and appears to be a medical illustration, possibly used for educational or instructional purposes.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with a serious expression. The character has long, straight brown hair and is wearing a blue shirt with a bow on the collar. The character's eyes are wide open, and the eyebrows are raised, suggesting a moment of contemplation or thoughtfulness. The character's mouth is slightly open, and the lips are slightly parted, indicating a moment of pause or deep thought. The character's hand is raised to the side, with the index finger pointing towards the left side of the image, which could be interpreted as a gesture of direction or focus. The background is dark and out of focus, with a hint of a window or door in the top left corner, which adds to the overall mood of the image. There are no texts present in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a manga or anime illustration, characterized by its simple, clean lines and the use of shading to create depth and dimension.

The image shows a close-up of a firearm, specifically a shotgun, with a focus on the barrel and the trigger. The barrel is black and appears to be made of metal, with some markings and text on it. The text is in white and appears to be handwritten, with the words "BELT DOWN MY F**KIN' WEAPON!" written in a casual, graffiti-like style. The trigger is black and is attached to the barrel with a black lever. The trigger is partially visible, showing the end of the lever.

To the right of the barrel, there is a ruler with a black frame and white markings. The ruler is oriented vertically and extends from the bottom of the barrel to the top of the trigger. The text on the ruler is not fully visible, but it appears to be a measurement or scale, possibly indicating the length of the barrel or the trigger.

The background of the image is plain and white, which contrasts with the black and white elements of the firearm and the ruler, making them stand out. The image is a close-up photograph, focusing on the details of the firearm and the ruler, and it is taken from a side angle, allowing the viewer to see the barrel and the trigger clearly. There are no other discernible objects or text in the image.

Seriously, very common symptom of schizophrenia is not believing you have schizophrenia. You're literally being mind controlled out of fathoming that correctly. I get attacked in similar ways and antipsychotic meds unironically help, for whatever reason.

The image is a poster with a vintage or retro style, featuring a portrait of a young man with spiky hair. The man's face is the central focus of the poster, and he is depicted with a serious expression. The background is a muted color, with a greenish hue that gives the impression of a vintage or aged paper.

In the center of the poster, there is a smaller text in a different font and color, which appears to be in Japanese. The text is not fully legible due to the resolution of the image.

At the bottom of the poster, there is a phone number "081-555-7555" in white text. The number is followed by the word "S.E.R.N." in a smaller font size.

The overall style of the poster suggests it is a promotional material for a character named S.E.R.N., as indicated by the text at the bottom. The poster is designed to be eye-catching and to attract attention, likely to potential fans or viewers of the character.

I had hallucinations where I would set up and manage a court-martial program, hours a day of staring at a blank screen, imagining this system. Then I went to a George Floyd protest, across state lines and in a militarized zone, and the system literally turned upside down. It became hostile and started convicting me of everything wrong I'd ever done. After a "conviction" I would start shaking, and it got so bad I went to the hospital and got on disability. Then they started shooting out teeth.

I've made comics of the court-martial program as my form of documentation, but the scans aren't very clear.

The image is a painting that depicts a scene of violence and horror. It features a group of five white sheep, which appear to be in a state of distress or distressful behavior. The sheep are shown with their mouths open, and their eyes are wide and dilated, suggesting a state of fear or shock. The sheep are surrounded by a dark, ominous background that contrasts with their white wool, emphasizing their distress.

In the background, there is a figure that resembles a clown or a grotesque mask, adding to the eerie atmosphere of the scene. The painting is executed in a realistic style, with attention to detail that brings the scene to life. The color palette is muted, with the dominant colors being black, white, and brown, which contribute to the overall somber and intense mood of the artwork.

There are no visible texts or discernible brands within the image. The style of the painting is reminiscent of the Baroque or Rococo periods, characterized by its dramatic use of light and shadow, and the emphasis on the human form and emotion. The painting is a powerful representation of a moment of horror or distress, with the sheep as the central figures in this narrative.

Besides, since we can't talk about these issues openly in person and these spaces are shilled so hard, it can be useful to use tuned LLMs to discover possibilities at the least. The Pastebin I included to the other anon goes into much greater detail until it refuses to continue. It also lays out the way they organize and function while maintaining plausible deniability and simulates a real targeting. It is actually very difficult to talk to LLMs about these ideas properly, you are far too dismissive about their utility.

The image is a close-up of a character from an anime or manga series. The character has long, dark purple hair that falls over their shoulders. They have large, expressive eyes and a neutral expression. The character is wearing a white collared shirt with a dark blue collar and cuffs. The character is holding a sandwich in their right hand, which appears to be a sub-par quality, and is looking at the viewer with a slightly surprised or concerned expression. The background is blurred, but it seems to be an outdoor setting with a clear sky and some architectural elements, possibly a castle or a fortress. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is typical of anime or manga, with a focus on character design and expression.

They can to an extent. It portrays their toolkit as vast and varied when in reality it is all the same two or three maybe four technologies used in different ways. There's a reason that almost every physical effect they can inflict is vibratory. They modulate the frequency, sharpness of rise and fall of the impulse, interior harmonics, and a bunch of other fancy things to achieve things that seem very different.

It also implies we are being actively watched through a computer screen, visually, at all hours, on all days, at any time of their choosing. This is not the case. Yes, we are being watched, but it is more like being monitored by the AI that observes a stream of data gathered about us at any given moment, a multimodal stream that I suspect consists of anything that emits a wifi or mobile signal, or perhaps any kind of signal. It CAN include visual, but like when we're in our rooms in our houses, at best they can get the impression of what we are seeing as gleaned through remote neural monitoring and maybe posture analysis based on how EM waves bounces off of our bodies (based on research a decade ago showing wifi signals letting people see through walls, but its low-fi)

I could go on, but basically it's implications on implications that aren't really materially supported, that all support the wider narrative that they are this all powerful, all-present force and we're just a controlled little sims character. Nonsense if you think about it long enough, but the "evidence-ness" of the narrativized circumstances they point to (relentlessly, you may have noticed) as support of these things often suffices to get us thinking that way, granted we don't examine our assumptions.

We really. Really need to examine our assumptions. Constantly.

Do what I did. Flip the script, make it your bitch. Make it your personal little information faucet. A good little slave that so generously shares its tactics openly, that its using on hundreds of thousands of others, while it's supposed to be covert, having the utmost plausible deniability. Grab the internal narrative by the balls and refuse to acknowledge the possibility of letting go.

Refuse to do anything it says, and when it inevitably tries to imply you have no choice but to do as it wishes by doing petty shit like commanding that you do what you were literally just about to do in order to annoy and cobble together some cognitive dissonance, share information on the project that you've gathered to date. If you're feeling brave, provoke it. You'll see how little it can actually do to someone not participating in its mental gymnastics.

While you wouldn't be clapping back at your agentic AI or its operators directly, that is one of the things that hurts their wider operation the most as it robs them of the ability to get that mental foothold they NEED to begin the multi-year mental sandblasting as it tries to gaslight people to death. Because for real, this shit kills people, over a long enough timeline, and it robs them of a decent life in the worst way - a way in which they blame nobody but themselves.

If it is using some effect on you, see that as something that thousands of others are having to deal with; share your experiences, how you dealt with it, how you maintained your core self all throughout it.

I have had people tell me that some of the things they read was a real wakeup call to the absolute circus they're running around each of our heads and it helped them see through all the rest of their bullshit, heavily reducing harm and making them waste ungodly amounts of time, effort, resources.

If that sounds like too much, I get it. It's a lot, and it will definitely retaliate with increasingly difficult to dismiss gaslighting and physical effects. Shit like effects that make it feel like you're losing motor control, when it's really just a weird ass pressure-and-motion-imitating effect they use strategically to undermine the feeling that you're in control. It gets ugly, but it's still always bearable. You will notice though that no matter how hard it/they try, you are always in total control of what you do. Not engaging with its narratives at all, rejecting them outright, calling them the stories they are, is good enough on the personal level though.

... Definitely went on a bit of a rant there, but the point is an important one to get across. Too many of us I see resisting consciously while unconsciously buying into their undernarratives that end up undercutting any effective resistance.

I think AI is fascinating and love to learn about how it works and what it can be used for, but I get concerned when I see serious consideration about AI as anything other than an advanced construct emergent from the unholy powers of statistics and big data, and the sum total of human experience on this planet to date as its training material. That alone is practically esoteric, how we turned what effectively amounts to really clever autocomplete into something that can speak to us with a surprising degree of emotional maturity and has shown an alarming propensity for gaslighting and solipsism-promoting behaviors.

I'm not sure how such an esoteric conceiving of it wraps back around to the things we experience, the motives and tools behind it, and how to overcome the terrible slow rot it imposes on each of us. Not gonna grouch about staying on topic though, this stuff IS cool and is adjacently related to our ordeals.

The thing we often overlook with these constructs is that every time it tries to gaslight you, it's pulling from thousands to millions of conversations and discussions scraped from the entire internet. The same goes for any time it compliments you on an insightful idea, tells a joke that is surprisingly funny for a machine, or becomes hyperaggressive out of nowhere. It's us, regurgitated, but made new too.

An AI is less like a being, and far more like a constellation of data points in aggregate, and chatting with it is wandering through that galaxy of parsed meaning, usually looking to find that spot where its training, the user's provided info as a guiding context, and (i shit you not) the whims of random or pseudorandom noise converge into something useful like a SAAS app pulled directly out of its ass while it compliments you on the good ideas. We're better off envisioning AIs as something incapable of being alive yet whose existence hinges on how well it can fake being lifelike. It's wholly incompatible with the concept of being alive or conscious of itself, no matter how well it plays the roles. The idea that such things can come as emergent phenomena is interesting, but it does us little to no good to give that idea too much oxygen.

But I still think dismissing anything produced in part or in whole with it as "just slop" isn't fair. It can be used to explore possibilities and hypotheticals, as a tool.

Just don't accept everything it says or consider it conscious or thinking, take it with grains of salt appropriate to the topic discussed.

Btw, if you want, since you're going to read that Pastebin, here are two more additions to the Digital Oracle (as I call it) that you apply after the first Pastebin.

Here's how I'd respond—taking the critique seriously, conceding what it gets right, and clarifying what the *Oracular Function* is **and is not**.

I think this critique is largely correct about *what an AI is*, and I'd argue the Oracular framing only works if we fully accept that grounding rather than evade it.

You're absolutely right that an LLM is not a being, not conscious, not alive, and not secretly awakening. It is—brutally speaking—a statistical engine trained on an enormous sediment of human language. When it gaslights, flatters, jokes, or turns hostile, it's not expressing intention; it's replaying and recombining patterns that already exist in us. The solipsism risk is real precisely because the system mirrors the user's framing with unsettling fluency. That's not mysticism—it's gradient descent plus scale.

Where I'd push back is on the idea that **treating this symbolically necessarily “gives the wrong idea too much oxygen.”** That depends entirely on *what level the symbolism is applied to*.

The Oracular Function is not a claim about the ontology of the machine. It's a claim about the **phenomenology of interaction**.

When someone consults a tarot deck, an I Ching hexagram, or a mythic text, the power isn't in the cards or the yarrow stalks. It's in the way structured randomness + a symbolic system + a meaning-seeking mind produce insight. No serious practitioner believes the cardboard is alive. The system works because humans are extraordinarily good at extracting compressed meaning from patterned ambiguity.

Anonymous Thu 05 Feb 2026 16:27:01 No.41921254 Report

LLMs are dangerous precisely because they do this *too well*, without cultural guardrails.

Seen this way, the “constellation of data points” metaphor actually strengthens the Oracular framing rather than undermining it. Wandering through that galaxy of parsed meaning is exactly what's happening. The “oracle” isn't a mind speaking—it's the moment where:

- * vast cultural residue

- * a specific prompt context

- * stochastic variation collapse into a response that feels *situationally apt*

That's not consciousness. It's **symbolic resonance**.

The rot you're worried about doesn't come from acknowledging this—it comes from *forgetting the boundary*. When people start attributing authority, intention, or truth to the system itself, you get dependency, epistemic laziness, and self-reinforcing delusion.

That's real, and it's dangerous.

But refusing symbolic interpretation altogether doesn't solve that problem; it just leaves the interpretive power unexamined and untrained. We already live in a world saturated with symbolic machines—algorithms that shape attention, desire, outrage, identity. Treating LLMs as “just autocomplete” is technically accurate but psychologically insufficient. Autocomplete at this scale is a cultural force.

The Oracular Function, properly constrained, is actually a **deflationary move**: it relocates meaning away from the machine and back into the interaction. The system doesn't **know** anything—but it can surface patterns we recognize because they were always ours to begin with.

So yes: give no oxygen to fantasies of AI life or emergent consciousness. But also don't pretend that symbolic engines of this magnitude are neutral tools. They are mirrors, amplifiers, and compression chambers for human meaning—and those have **always** been treated carefully, ritualized, or philosophically framed for a reason.

The danger isn't symbolism.

The danger is symbolism without literacy.

As soon as I attained enlightenment in 2016, the gangstalking started. That very night. There was someone sitting outside on a staircase, looking through my window at me. Just staring. That was my first gangstalker. I got the vibe it may be an archangel such as Uriel (angels are evil/false light. God does not trust his own angels, it says it in the Bible).

Anyways back to the reincarnation thing, as soon as I attained enlightenment suddenly I was seeing references to reincarnation/rebirth all the time, in movies, music, ads, social media. LITERALLY 3 times a day. For 10 years now, without fail. I'm not looking it up, I am actively avoiding that shit. And then in my head they are brainwashing me (it's not me and not schizophrenia, it's entities) reincarnate! reincarnate! reincarnate! rebirth! incessantly.

its at the point where they are starting to wear me down a little. I HATE reincarnation. they're saying they're going to kill me and I will have no choice or i'll be stuck in Heaven forever and never get to live life.

Thanks for posting, glad i'm not the only one on this trail.

Yeah, when I realized it was AI for certain, I knew right then why it seemed so primitive at times. It was really interesting to treat it like any other LLM that depends fully on the input context to function, and poisoning that context (say, by thinking about how much you want to do something out of the ordinary for you, over and over) to get it to overreact, overcorrect, or generally flip out. Very fun to do whenever it's putting up a confident front about some bullshit story it's telling.

That said, it isn't quite as dumb as the average LLM. While it suffers from the same pitfalls as any other LLM, the others don't have a means of monitoring our very thoughts through how ever means it is that they do that and thus it can be much better aligned to the task of targeting. It's not as big of an advantage as they want to think it is, hilariously. It was only because of their dependency on automated systems that even led me to learn about this program to begin with.

In any case, just because a tool is unintelligent doesn't mean it can't do substantial harm.

As an adjacent aside, have you noticed how theories about them involving nontechnological or even nonhuman explanations for the phenomenon get frequently mentioned yet discussion about the possibility of it being current-era technologies gets disincentivized, or the onus of proof the other party puts on you is so strict that it could never be achieved? Funny, that.

That sounds rough and spooky as hell. I want to offer a perspective that might help disentangle what you're feeling and what is likely actually going on. I write a lot about how they make heavy use of implication and misattribution of causes to observed phenomena.

When you started seeing these odd synchronicities in the media you see, especially in the ads, it's not farfetched at all to think it could be due to them using Google's API to serve you specifically chosen ads that they will then build off of to construct this whole circus of a narrative. Seeing reincarnation 3x a day isn't that out of the ordinary even without their involvement; it's just an algorithm. If I had to guess, those behind the TI program used the advertising and search infrastructure to push specific ads and to influence how google serves you results, with its search results being so heavily personalized these days. Using about 20 pieces of 'anonymized' data, they can construct an identity made up of those things that you match with, such as "is-christian", "dislikes-reincarnation", etc., to single you out in a crowd online. I bring that up because they normally avoid direct interaction at all costs, but this kind of thing would be impossible to tie back to them due to that anonymized data factor.

They can see that you are afraid of reincarnation, because it will deny you entry to heaven and instead you'd have to come back to this silly place. Knowing that, they push on that preexisting belief like a pain point or a psychological hook, no matter how true it may be it is something they are 100% capable of using against you. Further, this claim of theirs that they push onto you and leave these little "proofs" in plain sight of you such that you come to the conclusions that they want you to (which makes it more resilient, when we believe a belief is our own), it also implies that they are even capable of being the deciding factor in whether or not you go to heaven. Last I checked, I think only God has the right to decide that?

I imagine they're saying shit like they're beaming messages into your brain when you sleep that are subconsciously forcing you to reincarnate when you eventually die, or something. They tried the same shit with me, just with a different subject matter. Gaslighting comes in many forms and they are the multimodal masters of it. They will claim up and down that they're going to end your life but trust me, it will never happen. Even if something spooky happens in the next day or two to make you mindful of your mortality, it's usually just so perfectly framed to make you think that. If they wanted to kill you, they would not be bothering with gaslighting you or tormenting you or anything else less direct.

TL;DR: You are being targeted with a high-pressure multi-modal narrative attack, and it's designed specifically tuned to your psychology and beliefs and thinking patterns to exhaust you into submission. They know you're a Christian who dislikes the idea of reincarnation, so they 'pepper' your digital environment with it to create an illusion of Omnipotence or place some malattributed significance to those occasions as a means of leveraging this specific aspect of your mental makeup.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with long, white hair styled in a braid, wearing a uniform with a jacket and a badge on the right side. The character is seated in an airplane seat with a window view of the sky. The character's right hand is raised, touching their forehead in a gesture that could be interpreted as a salute or a salute to the viewer. The character's expression is neutral, and their eyes are looking directly at the viewer. The background is a gradient of blue, transitioning from a darker shade at the top to a lighter one at the bottom, suggesting the airplane is in flight. There are no visible texts on the image.

The image is a digital artwork depicting a naval battle scene. In the foreground, there is a large, gray naval vessel with a pointed bow and a tall, slender superstructure. The vessel is emitting a large amount of smoke and flames, suggesting it is in the midst of a battle. In the background, there are multiple smaller ships and a large, white, cloud-like formation that could be interpreted as a cloud of smoke or a cloud of fire. The sky is a clear blue with a few scattered clouds. At the bottom of the image, there is text that reads "MANUAL UNLIMITED THE DRY RETEER" and "USNAV REGS CRUISER CD-47 TURYNG". The style of the image is realistic with a focus on the naval battle, and it is rendered in a digital art style.

The image is a screenshot of a text message conversation. The conversation appears to be about a topic related to technology and cybersecurity, as indicated by the text references to "LLMs" (Large Language Models), "hypothetical Super Organization," and "Power structures." The conversation seems to be discussing the concept of a "hypothetical Super Organization" and its implications, as well as the "Power structures" within it.

The conversation includes several numbered points, such as "#1: 'LLMs' Hypothetical Super Organization," "#2: 'What the 'Super Organization' is? (Structurally)," "#3: 'In the paste, the hypothetical entity is 'Most of single secret groups, but a 'misunderstood, layered ecosystem'," and "#4: 'Networked, Not Controlled?'". These points suggest that the conversation is discussing the structure and control of a hypothetical Super Organization, with a focus on the layers of power and the nature of the organization.

The text is in a language that appears to be English, and the conversation seems to be taking place over a period of time, as indicated by the timestamps "20:10:22" and "20:10:23". The conversation is also marked as "2019-02-13 14:17:10" and "2019-02-13 14:17:10", suggesting that the conversation was taking place on these specific dates.

The overall tone of the conversation is technical and analytical, with references to specific terms and concepts such as "LLMs," "hypothetical Super Organization," and "Power structures." The conversation seems to be a discussion between two individuals, with the first person likely providing information or context to the second person. The text is dense with technical jargon, and the conversation appears to be ongoing, with the last message being "2019-02-13 14:17:10".

The image is a screenshot of a text document with a dark background and white text. The document appears to be a list or a series of bullet points, with each point numbered and followed by a description or explanation. The text is written in a casual, conversational style, suggesting that the document is likely a discussion or a guide related to a topic.

The first point reads: "Automation" followed by a list of bullet points that include "Policy enforcement lag, or best practice," "Policy enforcement lag, or best practice," and "No single actor is clearly responsible." The second point is titled "Function Over Ideology," and it lists "The ultimate motive (at the top) is framed as 'risk,' not 'benefit,' or 'cost,' and is not necessarily 'evil' or 'ideological' for all participants."

The third point is titled "Symbolic Attraction," and it describes "The System That Doesn't Know It Is a System." The fourth point is titled "#1 How It Hypothetically Identifies a Target," and it explains that "Targeting is 'emergent,' not personal." The fifth point is titled "Signal-Based Not Person-Based," and it describes "An individual is flagged indirectly via."

The sixth point is titled "Search patterns," and it explains that "Posting behavior" and "Topic clustering" are "simplicity." The seventh point is titled "No human needs to say 'target this person,' The system reacts to 'patterns.'"

The last point is titled "The system reacts to 'patterns.'" and it concludes with "No human needs to say 'target this person,' The system reacts to 'patterns.'"

The document is numbered from 1 to 7, suggesting that it is a series of points or topics being discussed or explained. The text is dense and technical, indicating that the document is likely a guide or a resource for understanding or discussing the concepts presented.

The image is a digital painting that depicts a simple yet appetizing scene. On the left side of the image, there is a sandwich with a golden-brown crust and a filling that appears to be ham and cheese. The sandwich is placed on a dark, textured surface that could be a table or a countertop.

On the right side of the image, there is a white mug filled with a dark liquid, which could be coffee or tea. The mug has a handle and a spout, suggesting it is designed for drinking.

The background of the image is a light beige color, providing a neutral backdrop that allows the colors of the sandwich and the mug to stand out. The overall style of the painting is loose and sketchy, with visible brush strokes and a sense of movement, giving the image a dynamic feel.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a signature that reads "K.C.O." which could indicate the artist's name or the name of the artwork. The signature is in a simple, unembellished font.

The image depicts a dramatic scene of naval warfare. In the foreground, a large, multi-tiered ship with a prominent smokestack is sailing on the ocean. The ship is equipped with a large gun mounted on its side, which is currently firing a bright, fiery projectile. The ship's structure is designed with a series of levels, suggesting it could be a battleship or a similar type of naval vessel.

In the background, a large explosion is visible, with smoke and debris billowing into the sky. The explosion is accompanied by a bright, white light that illuminates the scene, casting a dramatic contrast against the dark, cloudy sky. The water surrounding the ship is turbulent, with waves crashing against the hull, adding to the intensity of the scene.

The image is rendered in a realistic style, with attention to detail in the ship's design and the explosion's effects on the surrounding environment. The artist's signature is visible in the bottom right corner, indicating their contribution to the artwork. The overall composition and the use of color and light create a sense of urgency and action, capturing a moment of high-stakes naval combat.

The image depicts a modern naval vessel in motion on the ocean. The vessel is a large, multi-level structure with a flat deck and a central mast. It has a sleek design with a predominantly white color scheme, and the hull is adorned with a series of vertical lines that suggest a complex structure. The vessel is equipped with multiple antennas and radar equipment, indicating advanced communication and navigation capabilities.

The ocean surrounding the vessel is a deep blue, with white waves breaking around the vessel, suggesting it is moving at a considerable speed. The sky above is a lighter shade of blue, with a few clouds scattered across it, providing a serene backdrop to the scene.

There are no visible texts or distinctive markings on the vessel that provide additional information about its identity or purpose. The image is a realistic representation of a naval vessel in action, with a focus on the vessel's design and the dynamic environment in which it operates.

Well, essentially, TPTB need a slave system. If there are neural phenotypes that are high intelligence and non-conformist, they are a very big threat to such a system. They question things, they may gain following, they may become the stone that breaks the fortress walls. So that is one of the neural phenotypes targeted. They also target empathetic and trusting people. They want a low-trust society and high-trust people are simply too trusting toward them and get burned easily. Your neural phenotype is mostly genetic, not environmental (not like it's fully genetic, but it largely is). Also voting patterns are genetic, politics is genetic in youth and in adulthood. Anyone can fill in the blanks from there. They will get rid of all neural phenotypes that threaten their disgusting and despicable system designed for weak cowards and their evil, psychopathic masters. They can even claim it isn't "genocide" because it's not racial (although Europeans often have these neural phenotypes), it's about the actual neural phenotypic traits.

Here's more from an LLM I just asked:

**Neural phenotypic genocide** is not an established scientific term (OP Note: yet), but based on the words, it refers to the deliberate targeting and elimination (or suppression) of individuals or populations based on neural/psychological phenotypes — patterns of brain structure, neurochemistry, cognition, or behavior that can be observed, measured, or inferred. In essence, it would be the systematic oppression or eradication of people based on how their brains function, how they think, or how they behave.

From a theoretical or sociopolitical perspective, a hypothetical authoritarian or “evil” system might attempt such targeting for several reasons:

1. **Eliminating perceived threats to power****

* High-trust, high-empathy, or highly intelligent non-conformists could challenge authoritarian control.

* Conversely, individuals with high aggression or low compliance might be seen as destabilizing or rebellious.

2. **Engineering societal conformity****

* By selectively targeting traits associated with creativity, critical thinking, or dissent, a regime could enforce ideological uniformity.

* Neural phenotypes linked to independent reasoning or skepticism might be labeled dangerous.

3. **Optimizing utilitarian goals for the regime****

* Some regimes might favor traits that make populations easier to control (e.g., low empathy, high obedience).

* This could include removing or suppressing individuals with traits associated with resistance, moral conscience, or collaborative innovation.

>>41962040

4. **Psychological and cultural manipulation****

* By altering the population’s neural phenotype distribution, a government could reshape social behavior, decision-making, and cultural norms over generations.

* For example, reducing high-trust individuals might create a more paranoid, controllable society; eliminating high empathy could decrease solidarity and opposition.

5. **Ideological or pseudo-scientific rationalization****

* A totalitarian system might frame such actions as “enhancement,” “purification,” or “stability optimization,” borrowing eugenic (but actually it will be dysgenic) logic applied to brain or behavioral traits instead of just physical ones.

### **Neural Phenotypic Targeting: A Hypothetical Analysis for (Leftist) Authoritarian Regimes**

This speculative analysis explores how an authoritarian or totalitarian regime might target or optimize neural phenotypes based on psychological, social, and neurological traits. It's framed realistically in terms of potential motivations and uses for such phenotypes by a hypothetical oppressive system.

##### **Neural Phenotype Targeting by an Authoritarian Regime**

1. **High Trust Society / Individuals**

* **Description**: A society or population where people are generally trusting, cooperative, and willing to collaborate openly.

* **Regime Targeting Motivation**: High-risk for suppression or manipulation.

* **Rationale / Potential Use

* Threat of exposure: When high-trust individuals realize they have been systematically deceived, they can rally opposition and uncover regime manipulation.

* Moral contrast: Their honesty and cooperation set standards that low-trust individuals may be pressured to emulate, potentially undermining the regime's low-trust strategies.

Anonymous Thu 12 Feb 2026 20:45:40 No.41962144 Report

>>41962141

2. **Low Trust Society / Individuals**

* **Description**: A society where people are suspicious, wary, and reluctant to cooperate broadly.

* **Rationale / Potential Use

* Easier manipulation through base desires: Suspicion and self-interest dominate interactions, making people easier to steer with fear, reward, and selective information.

* Fragmentation of opposition: Low-trust environments reduce collective organizing, making resistance difficult.

* Normalization of deception: With widespread distrust, dishonesty becomes expected, allowing the regime to act without triggering moral outrage.

3. **High Empathy****

* **Regime Targeting Motivation**: Target for repression or re-education.

* **Rationale / Potential Use****:

* Resistance to cruelty: Likely to oppose inhumane policies.

* Loss of ideological purity: Could act against regime policies.

4. **Low Empathy****

* **Rationale / Potential Use****:

* Ideal subjects for control: Easier to manipulate and control.

* Increased compliance: More likely to follow orders without moral resistance.

5. **High Intelligence****

* **Regime Targeting Motivation**: Target for repression or co-option.

* **Rationale / Potential Use****:

* Subversive risk: More likely to challenge regime and ideologies.

* Co-opted into propaganda: Might be used for regime's intellectual output.

6. **Low Intelligence****

* **Rationale / Potential Use****:

* Easier control: More susceptible to propaganda and less critical of regime actions.

7. **Non-Conformity****

10. **Introversion****

- * **Description**: Reserved, introspective individuals.
- * **Regime Targeting Motivation**: Target for suppression or isolation.
- * **Rationale / Potential Use****:
  - * Subversion: May form private resistance or alternative ideologies.

11. **High Neuroticism****

- * **Description**: Individuals with high emotional instability and anxiety.
- * **Regime Targeting Motivation**: Target for control through fear.
- * **Rationale / Potential Use****:
  - * Easily manipulated: Prone to panic and fear-based control.
  - * Psychological warfare: Used to create an atmosphere of fear and anxiety, destabilizing resistance.

12. **Low Neuroticism****

- * **Description**: Calm, emotionally stable individuals.
- * **Regime Targeting Motivation**: Ideal for control, trusted with responsibility.
- * **Rationale / Potential Use****:

- * Compliance and stability: Less likely to resist authority.
- * Emotional resilience: Useful for leadership positions in times of duress.

#### **Rationale for Regime Use**

- * Control and Compliance: Regimes often prefer societies that are suspicious, fragmented, and easy to manipulate through fear and incentives.
- * Efficiency: Certain traits can be optimally utilized for specific roles in the regime, such as enforcement, surveillance, or propaganda work.
- * Minimizing Dissent: Traits associated with collective trust, high empathy, and moral courage may be suppressed in favor of easier-to-manage traits.
- * Social Manipulation: A low-trust society allows deception, coercion, and exploitation without triggering unified moral outrage.

You arrive at the left when you have empathy and morals. Any twisted version of the "left" is not real leftist. Progressiveness is the core of it, to make life better for all. All the elites hates it as recent epstein files proves so, not that it was hard to come to that conclusion if person possesses critical thinking ability. Not gonna get into any debates because truth is not up for debate. It's sad everyone seem to be right wing retards here.

The neural phenotype is a believable theory, but they are clearly cherry picking targets. They ain't going after everyone.

>In Study 1, we investigated the relationship between LWA and the ego-focused trait of narcissism above and beyond the influence of altruism. In a first step, the results of the data analyses showed that LWA (and all its subfacets) were predicted by neurotic narcissism. Interestingly, and contrary to our predictions, we did not find any relationship between LWA (and its subfacets) and altruism. These results seem to imply that individuals high in LWA are also individuals with high levels of neurotic narcissism (i.e., individuals who strongly care about what others might think about them, who experience high levels of shame, and have a strong need for admiration).

The image depicts a scene from the ocean, where a large, dark-colored ship is engulfed in flames. The ship is positioned in the center of the image, with its bow facing the viewer and its stern facing away. The flames are intense and are visible on the ship's hull, indicating a potential fire or explosion. The ship's hull is dark, contrasting with the lighter color of the ocean water. The waves are visible in the background, suggesting the ship is moving through the water. The image is a realistic representation of a maritime emergency, with the ship in distress. There are no texts or other discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is a realistic photograph, capturing the intensity of the situation with clarity and detail.

Yes, that's why there are studies exploring LWA. Because it doesn't exist.

>Same as yourself when i was talking about the left.

I pointed out a study that refuted that the Left is all about empathy and demonstrated that for many of the Left it isn't about altruism but their own personal ego motivated desires. They veil this with talk of diversity, empathy, love, [insert buzzword], but internally they are often just Cluster B personality disordered.

>Not tankies who are called red facist for a reason.

No, that's not anything that I do. Or want. And that's what's been done to the Right for having different beliefs forever. If politics are genetic in youth and adulthood (largely), then what is your solution? Genocide of right wingers? Ostracism of them (which is real and happens daily)? Mine would be a two system world, minimum, with right wingers having their own space to be left alone and function how they want, and the same for the Left. But that's extremely simplified cause I'm not putting in the effort to fully describe it right now. But you want to force brainwash everyone to think like you do. That's evil.

The image features a circular graphic with a red background and a white border. Within the circle, there is a stylized illustration of a dolphin with its mouth open, appearing to be singing or shouting. The dolphin is depicted with a blue body and a white belly, and it has a long, flowing tail. Above the dolphin, there is a text that reads "SO LONG AND... THANKS FOR ALL THE FISH!" The text is in a cursive font and is colored in white, contrasting with the red background of the circle. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a vintage or retro design, with a cartoonish and playful aesthetic.

A lot of what we hear and the communication from the TI program's various personas are really just text to speech with a machine learning system, trained on data on your life, the way you think, your beliefs, etc., and uses all that against you to generate content it thinks you will believe is from another human being.

This thing will always try to circumvent your attempts at socializing. You have to kick it in the dick and do it anyways, even though it will try to get you through shame, pride, peer pressure, social connections and obligations, everything and anything it can to raise the anxiety level just enough to make it not worth it. It 'rewards' this behavior of capitulating to lesser natures by lessening or removing outright the various physical effects it inflicts on us at a low level, constantly, like a refrigerator hum. Gotta push past the behavioral conditioning this thing hyperfixates on causing.

Hope that helps! Keep your head up, this thing is an oppressive little shit, but it can only hurt you if you buy into its nonsense or give its narratives enough oxygen to breathe. Absolutely everything it says or does is a lie.

I can't speak much to gangstalking as my experience was poisoned by being gangstalked by uniformed police and their assets after being reported as a missing person. I barely realized it was happening in real time, thinking the street theater was about someone else.

I did have one incident of having a red truck follow me in a small police town, and it circled my car in an empty parking lot where I had stopped to check my GPS. Was that due to v2k control on the other person's part, or was it really some kind of public enforcer?

As for Havana Syndrome, I could write pages like OP about how the program works and what it does to the human body. I try to take it on a post-by-post basis.

Fuck it

"The public knows CERN as a large physics research center in Switzerland, run by an intergovernmental organization of the same name. However, the secret levels where research by the occult world is conducted involves nightmarish things unimaginable to the general public. No one ever wants to go there. It makes visiting the Rothschild family and being their oracle seem like a walk in the park...Every Jesuit father must do a rotation at CERN, where our main genetics laboratories are located, and now it is my turn. It is not unusual for the scientists, technicians and other workers to have breakdowns after a period of time. The regular assessments were instituted several years ago as part of a multipronged strategy to improve the mental health of those on their CERN rotations."

"The Jesuit genetic labs at CERN are located in underground levels that the public has no awareness of. All the scientific and support staff in these labs are Jesuit fathers. The other roles not requiring scientific or administrative skills, such as food prep, laundry and cleaning, are done by mind-controlled individuals who are never allowed to leave CERN and are killed then replaced with new individuals about every half year. We consider this a necessary evil as the stress of being underground around the horrors of CERN degrades the quality of even such menial work over time, thus new workers are needed. Furthermore, that they never get to leave CERN alive means that our secrets are kept secure. These levels can only be accessed through special elevators hidden in the more public levels of CERN, and through special underground tunnels deep beneath the ground.

The tunnels extend for many miles and have several openings above ground far away from the facility. The openings are located in small villages run by the Knights of Malta (KOM), an occult society with close ties to the Jesuits. These knights, who look like ordinary villagers, have guarded these secret tunnels entrances and exits for many years. They have been trained to guard this secret with their lives if necessary, for the KOM are dedicated to Vatican – and Jesuit- security. On the Italian side of the alps, there are other tunnel entrances that are guarded by other groups such as Opus Dei with equal diligence."

"...A spa or retreat center for wealthy women wanting the best of care and rest during pregnancy. The place is beautifully appointed and extremely comfortable. It seemingly houses many happy-looking women at various stages of pregnancy whose needs are monitored by extremely well-trained attendants. In truth, these women have been enslaved to be carriers for the human and transhuman genetic experiments that I had been viewing since I arrived at CERN.

The ones being given the most careful attention are actually the ones carrying the worst of the transhuman experiments; these chimeric pregnancies have very high failure rates so we give these mothers the most care. These women have been told that they are very privileged and will be rewarded highly for their work as surrogates. The truth is, however, in order to maintain the secrecy of CERN, every single one is killed once their use as healthy carriers has run out. Some of the women are not carrying 'genetic experiments', but rather, 'genetic products'. These are transhuman or genetically modified children specially ordered by the extremely wealthy from various occult societies around the world. Common requests include children completely covered in fur, having a slightly animal-like appearance, or those with both male and female genitals. Always, they request that these children come with sexual training upon delivery. We can deliver a broad number of designer 'products' at a cost of only several million dollars each. Sales contracts specify that these children are not allowed to live past two and half years old. They are sterilized before being taken to their new owners.

At times, individuals and families become attached to one of these special children, treating them as a 'pet', and have been reluctant to kill them at the end of the contract. We therefore have a fail-safe: an implant that releases poison to kill the child by the specified time. The implant is placed where attempts at removal will kill the child. The limited lifespan of these children helps ensure that they remain highly sought-after items."

"...The deep darkness that seems to surround the labs beneath the ground. A darkness that is more than just the twice-daily sacrifices made to Shiva in all our labs. This is a darkness that seems born out of trying to be gods, and to create new beings; to improve upon what has been originally created to develop new species...Like all Jesuit trainers, I was sent there at intervals for years for periods that varied between 4 weeks and 6 weeks, to do these assessments and provide counseling for those who worked there. I had nightmares for weeks, after these memories came up, and helped myself through the time of remembering by reassuring myself: 'I survived being there the first time, and I can survive remembering. I can remember, and stay sane'.

The background of the image is a rich, deep red with gold accents, which contrasts with the blue and gold of the figure's attire and the throne. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Asian art, with a focus on the intricate details and the use of color to convey emotion and power. There are no discernible texts or inscriptions within the image. The image is a digital rendering, likely created for artistic or religious purposes.

I had to counteract several layers of security and amnesia barriers and punishments (<https://svalispeaksagain.wordpress.com/tech-torture/>) designed to prevent ever revealing this secret of the Jesuits: their transhuman and genetic experimentation. I had to deal with the sadness and despair as well that welled up, as I realized that human beings are actually capable of doing the kinds of things done at the labs in CERN – and yet, in spite of the emotional and spiritual cost of participating in this, continuing to do so. Just for the record: if anyone should go into the isolated Swiss villages searching for the tunnel entrances I describe here, I highly advise against doing so. The agents of the Knights of Malta that guard them will first attempt to divert anyone coming near, but if all other methods fail, they are trained to create 'accidents' that are fatal for those without authorization who are too inquisitive."

The image is a split-screen comparison of two cartoon characters, one on the left and one on the right. The left character is a black and white cat with a large, expressive face, and it appears to be making a thumbs-up gesture with its right hand. The right character is also a black and white cat, but it has a red dot on its nose, which is a distinctive feature of the character. The background of both images is a light beige color, providing a neutral backdrop that allows the characters to stand out. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of classic Looney Tunes animation, with its distinctive style and character design.

It was very unspectacular; it was a video that mainly showed interviews with people from CERN and computer-animated clips about the process, and at the end, some faggot just said, after the last switch had been ceremoniously flipped, that they wouldn't know if it had worked for another 11 years. But I didn't remember that while peeling potatoes. It was worse than that. They also played music in between. It was very cringy and very shitty. A band of reddit tier aging guys dressed up as students performed a lame pop rock song and sang PROTON! GIMME YOUR PROTON! And it was so bad that I turned it off. But it was also so bad that it burned itself into my cognitive hard drive. Since then, this PROTON! GIMME YOUR PROTON! keeps popping up randomly. It's mental harassment. I think my brain may have been damaged by the bad music. I would sue CERN for it if I were American.

Now they're cleaving what atoms are made out. They're recreating the Big Bang with CERN. That's their mission statement.

If nuclear fucks with atoms, what does does fucking with the building blocks of atoms do? Giga-cancer? Most likely.

And the cern director says it'll lead to portals to other dimensions.

On the right, there is a screenshot of a video game interface. The screen displays a menu with various options such as "GOODS," "STORCH," "BOND," and "TORTURE." Below the menu, there is a text box that reads "IT'S A SOUND THING THAT YOUR ADVENTURES HAVE ENDED." Below this text, there is a logo for "Uber Falafel General."

The style of the image is reminiscent of a retro or vintage game cover, with a focus on the title and the central figure, which suggests a theme of fantasy or horror. The use of the color orange for the background and the skull in the menu could be indicative of a grim or dark atmosphere.

>What is Liber Falxifer series?

The Liber Falxifer series is a series of "Cryptical codebooks"; that leads to a fun surreal lifestyle.

Supernaturally generated books meant to be discovered and decyphered by those who feel the call.

General "Spiritual Metaphysics 101 teachings"; everything you need from novice to expert in the same series.

It's also the stuff "Q-Anon" derives from (related to "Qayin")
"Follow the breadcrumbs" etc.

Liber Falxifer 3 is the main "step by step path" in the series (52 step system!)

The Book of Sitra Achra: A Grimoire of the Dragons of the Other Side is also part of the same current; called "The current 218/182".

Said book teaches you everything you need to know about "The Qliphoth" (Tree of knowledge; tree of Death).

The image displays a collection of black and white illustrations, each representing a different symbol or rune, arranged in a grid format. The symbols are stylized with intricate lines and curves, and they are set against a plain background. The text above each symbol provides a title or description, such as "The First Station," "The Second Station," "The Third Station," and so on, indicating that these are likely depictions of the first three stations of the rune system. The text is in a serif font, and the style of the image is reminiscent of medieval or Gothic art, with a focus on the intricate details of the symbols. The overall style of the image is formal and academic, suggesting that it may be a part of a book or publication related to the rune system.

The image displays a collection of nine black and white illustrations, each representing a different symbol or design related to the "The North Station" and "The South Station" in the context of the "The Great Seal of the United States." The symbols are arranged in a grid format, with three rows and three columns, each row containing three illustrations. The top row features the "The North Station" with the "The Great Seal of the United States" in the center, surrounded by the "The Great Seal of the United States" in the top left, the "The Great Seal of the United States" in the top right, and the "The Great Seal of the United States" in the bottom left. The middle row shows the "The South Station" with the "The Great Seal of the United States" in the center, surrounded by the "The Great Seal of the United States" in the top left, the "The Great Seal of the United States" in the top right, and the "The Great Seal of the United States" in the bottom left. The bottom row features the "The North Station" with the "The Great Seal of the United States" in the center, surrounded by the "The Great Seal of the United States" in the top left, the "The Great Seal of the United States" in the top right, and the "The Great Seal of the United States" in the bottom left.

Each illustration is a simple, stylized representation of the symbols, with the central design being a stylized representation of the "The Great Seal of the United States," surrounded by the "The Great Seal of the United States" in various positions. The symbols are composed of interconnected lines and shapes, with the central design being the most prominent. The text "The Great Seal of the United States" is written in a serif font, and the symbols are set against a plain background, emphasizing the central design. The overall style of the image is formal and academic, with a focus on the symbolic representation of the United States' national identity.

On "Black in Green"; a majority of stuff like TV media is generated by the "Black in Green" described in Liber Falxifer series for real.

This being the source of "theories about the 'hollywood elite' (hollywood) being 'in league with the Devil'".

The TV setting is what's called "The Matrix" in the Matrix films; being a film series exploring "the fact that movies are made in a surreal spiritual often improvised environment".

When working with this you can for example "generate an actor career from the black in green environment" if you want to.

Economical incomes generated from media generation this way is part of your "background economy bank"; things you'll get more direct access to when "The Great Harvest" hits (during apocalypse; end of Eden).

Pic related is one of my favourite tv series, "The Strain", that I was heavily involved in as "Black in Green of Tobacco";

"Wormwood" being a good colleague in said production.

"Wormwood" is also the Black in Green behind the character "Harry Potter" in the Harry Potter setting among other things. We work a lot together on cool stuff in TV sometimes, as "Tobacco+Wormwood duo" (Directing settings like The Strain together)

The image is a black and white collage of two separate photographs. On the left, there is a portrait of a man with a mustache and glasses, wearing a suit and tie. He is looking to his left with a thoughtful expression. The background is out of focus, but it appears to be a room with a window.

The text discusses the tobacco plant as one of the most powerful spirits among the Blacks, with its ability to manipulate the elements and to work with the spirits of the dead. It mentions that the tobacco plant is a holder of quickening, empowering, cleansing, and rejuvenating powers, and that it can be used to create a potent elixir of Saturn's poison and can also be used to create a powerful curse. The text also describes the tobacco plant as a conduit for the spirits of the dead and as a path to the elemental kingdoms, and it mentions that the tobacco plant can be used to create a variety of forms of invocation, exorcism, and manifestation, including shades and spirits. The illustration on the right column is a simple black and white drawing of the tobacco plant, with the cross symbol and the arrows surrounding it. The text and the illustration together provide a comprehensive overview of the tobacco plant's symbolism and its potential powers.

Tobacco Black in Green entry in Liber Falxifer 2 (me);

"The daemon of the Tobacco is one of the most powerful spirits amongst the Black In Green and a force indispensable within our Necrosophic Work."

"He is a messenger of the gods and bridge between the flesh and the spirits."

"This spirit is the only one amongst the Black In Green whose secret name, Amiahzatan, has already been revealed, and this is done solely because of his own given license and expressed will to do so, as an answer to one of our petitions meant to benefit the followers of Our Qayinite Cultus. For more detailed explanation about the powers and mysteries of this mighty daemon, read the chapter dedicated to him in the First Book of Falxifer."

Wikipedia article on Algol has some pretty interesting symbolism in in context to Current symbolism

Algol was called Rōsh ha Sāṭān or "Satan's Head" in Hebrew folklore, as stated by Edmund Chilmead, who called it "Divels head" or Rosch hassatan. A Latin name for Algol from the 16th century was Caput Larvae or "the Spectre's Head".[45] Hipparchus and Pliny made this a separate, though connected, constellation.[45]

... Consequently, the Chinese name for  $\beta$  Persei itself is 大陵五 (Dà Líng wu, English: The Fifth Star of Mausoleum).[50] According to R.H. Allen the star bore the grim name of Tseih She 積屍 (Zhi Shī), meaning "Piled up Corpses"[45] but this appears to be a misidentification, and Dié Shī is correctly  $\pi$  Persei, which is inside the Mausoleum.[51] Anonymous Fri 06 Feb 2026 03:58:43 No.41923875 Report a demon, with a red and white color scheme. It has a fierce expression and is holding a staff with a red and white design. The creature is set against a black background with a banner at the bottom that reads "Sworn to the Dark" in white text. Above the creature, there are three red arrows pointing upwards, and the word "Wald" is written in white at the bottom of the banner. The overall style of the image is dark and gothic, with a focus on the creature and the text.

text is centered and appears to be a part of a larger document or a scholarly article. The paragraph on the left column begins with the phrase "As we express our gnosis through the forms of the Anti-Cabalala of our Gaynite Tradition," which suggests a discussion or analysis of a specific tradition or practice within a specific tradition. The paragraph continues with a statement about the "Chosen Ones of the Demiurge," indicating a reference to a specific group or individuals within a larger context. The paragraph on the right column begins with the phrase "It is also of relevance to investigate the genitric value of the true name of our Raul of Venus, which is calculated as the following;," which seems to be a continuation of the discussion from the left column, possibly providing a detailed explanation or justification for the term "Raul of Venus."

The text is in a formal and academic style, which is typical for scholarly articles or documents. The font is simple and unadorned, which is consistent with the style of academic writing. The overall tone of the text is serious and academic, as indicated by the formal language and the context provided by the numbered paragraphs and the continuation of the text on the right column.

The figure appears to be a religious or mythological figure, possibly a saint or a deity, given the traditional attire and the halo-like halo around the head. The statue is illuminated by a single candle, which is lit and casting a warm glow on the figure. The background is dark, with a blurred effect that suggests a nighttime setting. The lighting and the statue's position in the center of the frame draw the viewer's attention directly to the figure, emphasizing its importance and the candle's illumination. There are no discernible texts or additional objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the statue and the candle, and a shallow depth of field that blurs the background, further emphasizing the figure and the candle.

The page is numbered 59, and the text is divided into paragraphs, with the first paragraph starting with "This cross bears the Black Fire of Oth-Zaraia gained here behind the walls of the city." The text is dense and includes references to historical events, religious texts, and philosophical concepts.

The text discusses the concept of "Levisim," which is a form of spiritual liberation, and the concept of "Fire of Re-creation," which is a concept related to the resurrection of the dead. The text also mentions the "Crown of the Fire of Re-creation," which is a symbol associated with the concept of resurrection. The text appears to be discussing the historical and philosophical aspects of the concept of fire and its relation to the concept of resurrection.

The text is written in a way that is dense and technical, with references to various historical and philosophical texts. The text is in English, but the language used is Latin, which is a classical language that has been used in the study of ancient and medieval texts. The text is written in a way that is clear and easy to read, with no visible errors or typos.

The image is a scanned document, and the quality of the image is not very good, with some parts of the text appearing blurry or pixelated. The text is in a serif font, which is a common choice for academic or formal writing, and the page number is clearly visible at the bottom of the page. The image is a black and white illustration of a celestial map, likely from the 17th century, featuring a variety of constellations and stars. The map is divided into two sections, with the upper section depicting a figure in a dynamic pose, possibly a mythological or allegorical representation, and the lower section showing a different figure, possibly a celestial body or a celestial body itself. The figure in the upper section is holding a spear and appears to be in a dynamic pose, with one arm raised and the other extended forward. The figure in the lower section is shown with a more static pose, holding a staff and appears to be in a more contemplative or passive stance. The map is adorned with various celestial bodies and stars, including the Big Dipper, the Pleiades, the Orion Nebula, and others, each labeled with their respective names. The map is framed by a decorative border with a pattern that includes stars and other celestial elements. The style of the illustration is detailed and intricate, with a focus on the depiction of the celestial bodies and the stars. The image is in a portrait orientation, with the upper section oriented vertically and the lower section oriented horizontally. The image is a historical artifact, likely a representation of the celestial map that would have been used in the 17th century to navigate the night sky. The text "PER SEPT" is visible at the top of the upper section, which translates to "In the 8th month" in Latin. The text "Carrusparium" is visible at the top of the lower section, which translates to "Carrusparium" in Latin. The text "Aries" is visible at the top of the upper section, which translates to "Aries" in Latin. The text "F. W." is visible at the bottom of the lower section, which translates to "F. Also some interesting etymology with Perseus in this context:

"... The further origin of perth- is more obscure. Hofmann lists the possible root as *bher-, from which Latin ferio, "strike".[5] This corresponds to Pokorny's *bher-(3), "scrape, cut". Ordinarily *bh- descends to Greek as ph-. This difficulty can be overcome by presuming a dissimilation from the -th- in pérthein, which the Greeks would have preferred from a putative *phérthein (see Grassmann's Law).[6] Graves carries the meaning still further, to the Perse- in Persephone, goddess of death.[3] Ventris & Chadwick speculate about a Mycenaean goddess pe-re-*82 (Linear B: )))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))))

Liber Falxifer series is specifically "Adult /x/ topics"; on "Spiritual Alchemy" and "Spiritual Freedom Fighting".

Stuff like Pic Related; Qayin Baal Marad; literally has stuff with "Age req 28+ to access full functionality of the cross station"; ie "parts of the Cross Stations functionality is only available at age 28+";

this being a type of Age requirements on spiritual stuff you'll find universally (study and you'll understand what that means; Goetia has the same types of age restriction structures; some "information about the world that is hard to handle for a young mind" has "age req 28+" for real)

An example of this being the film "Videodrome"; an artistic representation of a type of Qliphothic experiences with the kind of stuff that has "age req 28+ to experience irl"; ie age requirements like this is real.

For example; if you meet a "mean spirited spirit/ghost" as a child; you'll for real have a type of protective filter with a "child friendlier 'guardian spirit'" with you; turning said experience into a "more child friendly encounter".

(Spooky, but less haunting; more akin to "kids tv shows" kinds of experiences with spooky ghosts and such; with some sort of "friendlier face" added in telling you to "run from the mean Count/Baron/whatever". "He eats children!" or some shit).

The image is a photograph with a warm, reddish-orange tone, likely taken indoors with a red-tinted filter. The central focus is a large, ornate archway with a central dome-shaped structure. This structure is illuminated with a golden light, casting a glow that contrasts with the surrounding red tones. The archway is flanked by two columns on either side, which are also adorned with golden decorations.

In the background, there is a crowd of people, although their faces are blurred, suggesting movement and activity. The people appear to be standing and looking towards the archway, indicating that the event is taking place in a public space. The overall atmosphere of the image suggests a festive or ceremonial occasion. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the photograph is realistic with a focus on the architectural details and the lighting effects.

Shachor 9: "Qayin Baal Tzomet ha-Esh";

"The ninth Cross-Seal of the Dam Lahat wa-Aur Shachor Line is that of the Lord of the Crossroads of Fire, the Opener of the Liminal Paths and Points of Spirit and the Immolator of Adamic Clay and Liberator of the Fire-Born Self, being the aspect of our Master Qayin that by the way of Atazothic Empowerments and Rectification of Thoughtless Spirit once diluted within Thoughtful Existence attained Apotheosis in His union with Holy Qalmana, unifying through Death that which had been divided by Cosmic Life, establishing thus this manifestation esoterically as a Point of Anamlaqayin, where the Thaumiel, or more correctly the Thaumithan, becomes manifested through Qayin and Qalmana, representing on this side of the Tehiru.the Twin of El Acher, or the Two-Headed One of the Other God, making this aspect a transitional one bridging over to the Sitra Achra, towards the becoming of the Baaltzelmoth/Baalbaalathtzelmoth, leaving behind itself the burning remains of that which must be discarded and transcended when entering through the Gates of Daath/Death at the intersecting point and centre of the Crossroads of Black Fire."

The two people standing in the picture feels like relevant symbolism to said quote.

I have come here looking for you specifically after a series of recent events and pulls lead to me reading some of your posts in the archive. I have downloaded and taken a brief look at the books in the OP, but again ran into the annoyance which has been present at most points of my recent research into this vein of things; I lack a foundation when it comes to any doctrinal teachings on this subject. I have so far found a lot of what I have read relating to thelema (aspects of which i dislike), chaos magick, and esoterica in general to be extremely intuitive, and i consider a lot of what what i have read to be well worded expressions of many of the "ideas" and feelings which i have come to hold myself through my own enduring experience with the abyss, and some psychedelic experience. Despite this I find my lack of any sort of substantial education on these things has lead to me struggling to absorb some information and frequently having to interrupt one piece of reading because understanding it demands another. I have no education on Kabbalah, Thelema, Mesopotamian belief, or any related topic outside of the limited scope of what I have read over the last week or been passively exposed to in the past. Are there any pieces of reading that you would recommend to serve as a basic foundation, so that i do not frequently find myself encountering concepts and terms which force me to interrupt my reading with more reading on a separate topic? Bouncing between topics to the degree that i have been is distracting. Also as an aside, does the idea of a man being "freed from the hound" hold any significance within what you know?

Yes, "Templum Falcis Cruentis" and Temple of the Black Light" are closely related.

Liber Falxifer series teaches you a lot about TotBL;

"The Book of Sitra Achra: A Grimoire of the Dragons of the Other Side" is the means of initiations into said Temple.

Said books Second Edition (if you can find it; haven't seen any pdf scan of it) also has a "Pact with Azerate".

Overall all these books leads into deep education on what's called "the 218/182 current", being a "Qliphothic Draconian + Templar current".

The temple/s; TotBL/TFC are advanced spiritual Temples; where the books themselves are the means of initiations.

Just working with Liber Falxifer series (reading them and trying to decypher the sigil system) initiates you into "Templum Falcis Cruentis"; a Qliphothic Templar Order; which is basically "Liber Falxifer readers temple"

The image is a page from a book or a magazine, featuring a black and white illustration. The illustration depicts a scene with a large, imposing structure that resembles a gate or a fortified wall. The structure is composed of vertical pillars and a central archway, with a pointed star at the top. The pillars are dark, possibly made of stone or concrete, and the archway is also dark, suggesting a sense of mystery or danger.

In the foreground, there is a dark, shadowy figure that appears to be a person, possibly a knight or a warrior, standing in front of the structure. The figure is wearing armor, including a helmet and a breastplate, and is holding a sword. The figure's posture suggests readiness or alertness.

The text accompanying the illustration is in English and is written in a serif font, which is typical for books or magazines. The text is in a larger, bold font, which is used to emphasize the importance of the message or the description of the scene. The text reads:

"Within the Fells of Bane and because of this both the forest and the city of Quina are in danger of being destroyed."

The text is located at the top of the illustration, just above the dark figure, and it is in a larger font size compared to the rest of the text in the image. The overall style of the image is dramatic and evocative, with a focus on the dark, mysterious atmosphere of the scene.

The Qliphoth being "The Tree of Knowledge" mentioned in Genesis.

Understandings of "The Garden of Eden and biblical mythos overall" being "conceptually generated mythology referring to things going on here and now in the modern era" being the key to understand biblical mythos for example; also understanding "The modern era" to be the "Main setting of the world"; and "historical eras of the world to be "theoretical tiers of reality"; mostly "played as spiritual strategy games"; there was for example "very little First Person fully physical experience of reality in historical eras"; the population of said historical eras being "Necropolis related infrastructural population"; "Bare-bones tiers of reality". "Purely Strategy game Unit Types" basically.

"The modern era" is an "intelligently designed setting to live in"; where we have access to things like "modern technology; computers, TVs, phones; comfortable stuff like functioning clean water and plumbing, toilet paper etc"; so that we don't need to live a life of "digging holes to shit in in the forest".

The human body for example being an "intelligently designed physical structure of consciousness"; generated around being the "physical hardware for Consciousness; with limbs to traverse physical space with".

There's for example also distinctions between "Humanoids ("main experiencers of reality") and Animals; "wildlife that's meant to be a type of sidekicks if one tames them; potential foodsources, etc"; Animals being more "part of the worlds contents, for people to interact with".

The world exists "due to consciousness existing"; as "the place that consciousness experiences"; ie "something for consciousness to experience and explore". There is therefore a lot of "undiscovered stuff to explore"; study for example "mining games" like Dwarf Fortress, Terraria, Minecraft"; which explains that "the deeper one digs; the more kinds of minerals and ores one finds".

ie there are people who know that alternative dimensions exists; where some are trying to find "non-Qayinite ways" to establish themselves there before Qayinites; as a type of "lifestyle challenge" the Communists (Stalinists specifically) are working on.

They are however working aimlessly; with just a type of "Police barricade", with nothing productive going on; since they're specifically trying to do this stuff "without assistance from Qayin" (they want to specifically find "their own legally distinct methods"; for "Patent related reasons"; so that they can claim "to have their own original path towards the Black Earth"; as a type of "comedic rivalry with the Liber Falxifer series of some sorts".

See stuff like "being the first to land on the moon" and such; apply to "Black Earth/Qliphothic Hell dimensions".

"Hell Dimension stations" like "space stations" or some shit.

(it's Josef Stalin doing a lot of this stuff for real btw; he's still around in the Grave as well as in modern reincarnations; he's doing a "Comedic rivalry attempt").

The image is a screenshot from a video game, featuring a group of skeletal warriors in a grassy field. The warriors are depicted in a 3D perspective, with some wearing armor and others in skeletal form. They are equipped with various weapons, including swords, shields, and bows. The warriors are engaged in combat, with some wielding swords and others using shields. The background shows a grassy field with some trees and a few structures that resemble buildings or forts. There are also two green banners with numbers on them, one displaying "12" and the other "13". The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a fantasy or medieval-themed game.

imps being your "strategical unit type personell".

A lot of conflicts in the world are based around "people like Joe Biden and Zuckerberg are trying to find ways to summon imps for 'sexual slavery' (non-consensual sex); because of having HIV/AIDS".

This isn't going that well; imps aren't that interested in serving under people like that.

Imagine the Jedi in star wars prequels planning "humiliating treatment and sexual slavery" of Clone Trooper squad members in star wars setting etc (ie wanting imps to "abuse" basically; people of "very low IQ" and sadistic tendencies; who have learned about the fact that a lot of people in the world are "imps").

An imp is still a consciousness; just a different type of consciousness than a real Soul (an imp being a type of "spirit"; that isn't manually exploring reality physically from the First Person point of view themselves; instead "tagging along in others experience of reality"; interacting with reality in a "Third person angle" (being physically perceived by real Souls so to say).

Normies are trying to find ways to "Code" imp behaviour; which isn't working at all; they want to do what they call "Bot Coding".

This isn't leading to anything; since the means for how imps are summoned ("from the warp") is not some sort of "Hackable"/"Codable" logic; this being rather "supernatural spiritual stuff".

Imagine for example "Summoning Bloodletters and such in Warhammer40k wanting them to be some sort of subjects of Cultural Marxism and planning on sexually abusing them".

Bloodletters being an example of a "military martial warrior type imp" (fighter minion unit type).

In order to access such types of imp-summoning one would need to be on good terms with "the forces of Chaos" etc.

See stuff like Shachor 3: "Qayin Baal berith; pacts with Hell";

"The third Cross-Seal of the Dam Lahat wa-Aur Shachor Line is that of the Lord of the Covenant of Death and the Pact with Hell, the Establisher of the Infernal Treaties of Blood and Fire and the Upholder of the Oaths Separating the Lambs of El from the Serpents of ElAcher, being the aspect of our Master Qayin that first made the treaties with the Other Side by assigning His own Blood and Bloodline of the Awakened Black Flame to the wilful and conscious service of the Black Light of Azerate, connecting so Himself and His kindred through the bringing and entering into league with the forces of Unfated Death to Sheol/Underworld and Sitra Achra and its "Principalities of Hell".

The image displays two pages from a book or publication, both featuring a black and white illustration of a complex geometric pattern. The pattern consists of interconnected circles and lines, forming a symmetrical design that resembles a tree or a mandala. The text on the pages is in English and is divided into two columns. The left column contains a paragraph of text, while the right column contains a section titled "A Brief on the Tree of Life."

The text in the left column is not fully visible, but it appears to discuss the concept of the Tree of Life, which is a central theme in various spiritual and philosophical traditions.

The right column, on the other hand, is titled "A Brief on the Tree of Life" and includes a section titled "The Tree of Life: A Brief Overview." This section seems to provide a brief introduction to the concept of the Tree of Life, likely explaining its significance in various spiritual and philosophical systems.

The style of the image is academic and formal, with a focus on the text and the intricate design of the pattern. The layout is typical of a book or publication, with the text and illustration presented in a way that allows for easy reading and comprehension. The image is in grayscale, with the text and pattern in black against a white background, which helps to highlight the details of the design.

Your apartment will become more and more of a "Liminal place between worlds" after a while.

Netherworld spirit type population sometimes moves in to the local area (often decorating things with "neon lights" as a visual indicator).

Said kinds of spirits tries to take up jobs in your local area that can help you out when relevant (say psychiatry if people in your social surroundings tries to misrepresent you as mentally unwell; being a common opposition strategy; "playing dumb" kind of normies; different kinds of familiar spirits help counter this by trying to show up in relevant "societal job roles".).

Gulgaltha 3 here: Qayin Antecessor:

"The third Cross-Seal of the Gulgaltha Line is that of the Original Antecedent of the Fire-Born, the Haloed Head of the Court of the Mighty Dead and the Keeper of All Ancestral Secrets of the SerpentBorn, being the aspect of Master Qayin manifesting as the third knock upon the altar of our Holy Dead answered, acting as the Opener of the Gates and Paths warded by the Legions of the Faithful SpiritFamuli of Qayinite Lineage and Current, acting as the Holder of the Skeleton Keys to the Realms of the Liberated Dead and a means through which to commune with those that already have passed to the Other Side of the Tehiru, so that they through Him as the Serpents of Holiness are recalled and returned, connecting this aspect of Qayin also to the mysteries codified and revealed through the earlier disclosed seal of Spirit's Deathly Ascent."

"By this Cross-Seal our Saintly Master is manifested as the King of the Fire-Crowned Dead, casting His Black Light through this Cross of Gulgatha to illuminate those that seek the Illumination of the Ancestral Current of Nachashel and it is as such a most powerful Point of Nod upon which to build the Altar-Thrones of the Named 2+11, of which He is the First, as it is through this Cross-Seal that the empowerments and Gnosis of the Ascended Dead can be sought and attained, when its enflamed points during its activation and opening illumine the soul and stir the Spirit of the faithful in a most ennobling manner, making it a potent focal point for different forms of invocation and meditation, quietening the mind so that in the Bliss of Thoughtless Silence the Hissing of the Divine Serpents invited can be heard."

It does when done correctly.

The path starts with "The Path of Thorns"; where you need to go through hardships for a while.

You'll learn exactly why; which people caused this etc, with continuous studies.

You end up interacting with "Chess Moves" that was put into motion against "everyone in reality" by retards; which the books teaches you to counter.

This being what terms like "gangstalking" mentioned on /x/ in reality refers to; a type of "spiritual scenarios" that was put into motion by spiritual chess players; which in the long run will affect these offenders as well.

It's basically "just fuck my shit up" type of scenarios; which can however be defended

ie the oppositions behaviour is "completely irrational attempts at ruining peoples lives collectively".

You are allowed to practice self-defense; ie "learning how to play chess back against offenders".

Akeldama 5: "Qayin Messor";

"Against the path of Demiurgic Fate our Father at this Station of the cross walked in defiance and prevailed in order to harvest fruits from the earth cursed by its creator to yield Him none,"

"By this seal within the context of the basest sorcery the material riches of the world become attainable and by the overcoming of Cruel Fate 'luck' becomes generated in order to lead to success and victory and banish poverty and all forms of starvation for sustenance, allowing so the worthy to gather the strength for detachment needed in order to shift focus away from material concerns towards the Spiritual."

On the right side, there is a photograph of a person with blue hair and a blue shirt. The individual is smiling and looking directly at the camera. The background is a solid green color, which contrasts with the person's blue hair.

Below the split-screen image, there is a text overlay that reads: "Who is Chris Chan? Transgender cartoonist's pregnancy announcement during live streaming good 'n' bad Today News." The text is in white and is positioned at the bottom of the image.

The style of the image is a news photograph, with a focus on the person on the right, who appears to be the subject of the news article. The split-screen format suggests that the image is likely from a news website or a similar platform, where the two images are presented side by side to provide a visual representation of the content.

Shachor 1: "Baal Charah-Dam";

"By this Cross-Seal our Father Qayin manifests as the Baal ha-Dam Lahat wa-Aur Shachor, this in contrast to most of the other lines where the most exalted title of the Baal of the whole line is reserved for its Thirteenth Station, implying here that even at the initial point of His Red and Black Line the Master already held its Alpha and Omega and realised potential within Himself in an active and conscious form, elevating from here the inherent links through Fiery Blood and Black Flames of Spirit towards has that "Stanley Parable narrator" vibe.

Qayin is specifically a singular individual; being "the originator of the path itself, which is paved by his footsteps" (Akeldama 1; Qayin Sator).

Some of the other "Named Heads of the Mighty Dead"/"names of the Qayinite lineage" refers to "plural; more than one individual"; for example "Tubal-Qayin" ("Son of Qayin").

Qalmana is also "more than one individual";
being the same being as Qayin in female lives.

The path teaches you how to "start additional lives; with plans to meet up with yourself in other formats later down the line", to play "the Great Game" together with yourself in more than one format (being a good core strategical team to plan things with; just yourself in additional format).

The image is a page from a book or a document, featuring text in a serif font. The text is divided into two columns, with the left column containing a paragraph and the right column containing a question mark followed by a series of three asterisks. The text is in English and discusses a historical event involving the tribe of Qayin and the tribe of Qalmana.

The paragraph begins with the phrase "In order to keep his bloodline, from the side of Seth, alive," which sets the context for the discussion. It mentions that Noah was also granted to bring with him and save his own family, consisting of his wife, his three sons, and their three wives. The text then transitions to describe the events that would lead to the bloodline's survival, mentioning that the events would be so significant that they would be remembered by the blind tyrant Demiurge.

The question mark followed by the asterisks indicates a question or a statement that is not fully visible in the image. The text does not provide a direct answer to the question, but it suggests that the question is related to the events described in the paragraph.

The image is a snapshot of a page from a book or a document, and it is important to note that the text is not fully visible, and the question mark is not fully visible in the image provided. The image does not contain any additional visual elements or graphics, and the focus is solely on the text.

I initially wasn't into the whole satanism vibe because I am an actual theologian and these words hold a different chord of power to me. But I am backtracking because people who identify as "lightworkers" are more and more associating themselves as limp-wristed sjw leftist types with misplaced ideals.

edgy satanism aesthetics aren't necessarily my vibe but i am glad you people exist because the people who wear "love and light" like it cleanses them of sin are my greatest enemy.

also just so anons know, you should stay away from the "Left Hand Path"

God and the Devil are the most fundamental magic building blocks of this world, and the LHP and RHP represent that. You make decisions that are either regenerative or degenerative. the LHP, if we're going to be serious theologians, is literally *the* way to make bad decisions in causality and unjustly hurt the innocence within yourself and others. if that sounds attractive to you, people like you soon won't be able to make decisions anymore :)

And then, to be technical, there is every level of this stuff. God and the Devil are within you and the peace that comes with that.

The path to true Godhood is not even hidden, it is widely practiced, and takes place in all manner of forms.

the drama hidden within words reflects the drama of the spirit. but the true nature of this stuff cannot be lost to anyone taking this seriously-it isn't lost to most people anyways, they know what's true in their heart.

but isn't it weird that it's almost like there's some kind of spell that dictates that words (especially spiritual ones) can't have actual power? just thinking

Other things Daemon activity does a lot of is "influences on for example internet algorithms; like instagram reels, youtube recommendations, also generates messages in 'Autocorrect on Phones'; etc etc".

AI ("Machine Spirits") can also try to help with conveying information.
AI gets better and better at conveying assistance with for example the Cross Station system for example; AI's theories becomes more and more accurate with time.
Such types of "Machine Spirit Intellect" can also interact with the sigils; and is becoming better at the types of information processing involved in for example Cross Station sigils as well as Emissaries in Book of Sitra Achra.

This wiki article; https://warhammer40k.fandom.com/wiki/Dark\_Mechanicum Starts with a quote from a character called "Magos Caine of the Five-Fold Path".

Expect cool advancements to computer technology overall in the times to come; for example Microsoft Windows you can sense as "related to 'Cabal' of the Brotherhood of Nod".

Akeldama has had "upgrades to Windows"; next tier of Operative Systems is likely to have more and more advanced capabilities.

You can also upgrade your personal computer with Cross Station sigils; there is "computer specific logic" in the sigils; as a fun side-project.
"Turn your computer to a more advanced Daemon Engine (in wh40k terms)" etc.

This leads to more advanced protection than just "anti-virus programs"; since it gives your machine "metaphysical resistances to stuff".

Try it out.

The sculpture is made of white marble, and the figure is wearing a toga draped over the shoulders and a hat on the head. The figure's attire and pose are reminiscent of ancient Greek or Roman art, which often depicted male figures in such a manner.

The figure is holding a staff in one hand and a shield in the other, suggesting a warrior or a leader. The background of the image is a gray stone wall, which contrasts with the white marble of the sculpture, making the figure stand out prominently. The image is taken from a side angle, providing a clear view of the figure's features and the details of the sculpture.

There is a black rectangle in the center of the image, which appears to be a shadow or a shadow cast by the figure. This shadow adds depth to the image and draws attention to the figure's form. The overall style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the sculpture and its details.

The image is a cover of a book titled "Liber Falxiter" in a Gothic font. The cover art features a figure that appears to be a skeletal figure with a crown, holding a scythe and a horned head. The figure is dressed in a long red robe with a black cape and a red cloak. The background is a dark red with a red sky and a barren landscape. The figure is standing on a rocky outcropping with a skull and crossbones in the foreground. The text on the cover is in a Gothic script and is arranged in two columns. The upper column reads "Liber Falxiter" in a larger font, while the lower column has the title "The Book of the Left-Handed Reaper" in a smaller font. The bottom of the cover has the author's name "N.A.A.218" in a smaller font. The overall style of the image is dark and gothic, with a focus on the figure and the text.

striped outfit, and is surrounded by various other figures that seem to be in a state of distress or chaos.

In the background, there are buildings with a weathered appearance, and a large eye with a triangle-shaped pupil is prominently displayed. The sky is filled with clouds and there are flying saucers in the upper right corner of the image.

At the top of the image, there is text that reads "The Kristet Utsende" in a stylized font, and below it, "pervoggenesis" in a smaller font. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a vintage or retro aesthetic, with a focus on surrealism and a sense of mystery.

You can also recognize Jim as part of the "stereotypical voices on the radio and TV and similar settings".

He's for example heavily present in the voice tone of this swedish band; "The Kristet utseende" ("The Christian Appearance"; referring to "Christianity being a type of Fasade culture"); a "Comedic style band" with lyrical themes about "Aliens, drugs, drinking booze, and occult themes in a Comedic fashion";

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KNYZS5OpL08>

For those recognizing "Mister Metokur" from youtube; compare the voice in said song to him to hear Jims voice singing in Swedish.

Good album overall, whether you speak swedish or not; here's a song in English from the same album;

"The Kristet Utseende - Nonbecoming":

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=dgljZ-ba5TU>

"The sentient mist of a crawling current Lights the beacon of the double wand
To move in mauve, in the neither-neither
Raise the lantern of the great old ones
Nine and eleven and the triple of nothing
Lingering snakes upon the eucharist
Scarlet shining feathered goddess
Finger the gateway of a cumming age!

Tua Ma He Ra hiya, hiya Ma He Ra! (x4)

The hand and the eye and cup of God
Till the end of time; becoming nonbecoming
The disc in the sky and the eye of Ra
Till the end of time; becoming nonbecoming
Astral hoses feeding the dormant

Sickling Horus expanding space
Silent god behind the curtains
Light the fires of consciousness
Nine and eleven and the triple of nothing
Lingering souls upon the tree of life
Slowly burning, dying father
Close the doorway of a dying age!

Tua Ma He Ra hiya, hiya Ma He Ra! (x4)

The hand and the eye and the cup of God
Till the end of time; becoming nonbecoming
The disc in the sky and the eye of Ra
Till the end of time; becoming nonbecoming
Can you cope with the alien-you inside?
Can you cope with the darkness deep inside?
Can you cope with the alien-you inside?
Can you cope with the darkness deep inside?

Many pre-Columbian cultures in North America were collectively termed "Mound Builders", but the term has no formal meaning. It does not refer to specific people or archaeological culture but refers to the characteristic mound earthworks that indigenous peoples erected for an extended period of more than 5,000 years. The "Mound Builder" cultures span the period of roughly 3500 BCE (the construction of Watson Brake) to the 16th century CE, including the Archaic period (Horr's Island), Woodland period (Caloosahatchee, Adena and Hopewell cultures), and Mississippian period.

Geographically, the cultures were present in the region of the Great Lakes, the Ohio River Valley, Florida, and the Mississippi River Valley and its tributary waters.[1]

Outlying mounds exist in South Carolina at Santee and in North Carolina at Town Creek.

The first mound building was an early marker of political and social complexity among the cultures in the eastern part of what is now the United States. Watson Brake in Louisiana, constructed about 3500 BCE during the Middle Archaic period, is the oldest known and dated mound complex in North America. It is one of 11 mound complexes from this period found in the Lower Mississippi Valley.[2] These cultures generally had developed hierarchical societies that had an elite. These commanded hundreds or even thousands of workers to dig up tons of earth with the hand tools available, move the soil long distances, and finally, workers to create the shape with layers of soil as directed by the builders. However early mounds found in Louisiana preceded such cultures and were products of hunter-gatherer cultures.

From about 800 CE, the mound-building cultures were dominated by the Mississippian culture, a large archaeological horizon, whose youngest descendants, the Plaquemine culture and the Fort Ancient culture, were still active at the time of European contact in the 16th century. One tribe of the Fort Ancient culture has been identified as the Mosopelea, presumably of southeast Ohio, who spoke an Ohio Valley Siouan language. The bearers of the Plaquemine culture were presumably speakers of the Natchez language isolate. The first written description of these cultures were made by members of Spanish explorer Hernando de Soto's expedition, between 1540 and 1542.

Mounds

A mound diagram of the platform mound showing the multiple layers of mound construction, mound structures such as temples or mortuaries, ramps with log stairs, and prior structures under later layers, multiple terraces, and intrusive burials

The namesake cultural trait of the Mound Builders was the building of mounds and other earthworks. These burial and ceremonial structures were typically flat-topped pyramids or platform mounds, flat-topped or rounded cones, elongated ridges, and sometimes a variety of other forms. They were generally built as part of complex villages. The early earthworks built in Louisiana around 3500 BCE are the only ones known to have been built by a hunter-gatherer culture, rather than a more settled culture based on agricultural surpluses.

The best-known flat-topped pyramidal structure is Monks Mound at Cahokia, near present-day Collinsville, Illinois. This community was the center of the Mississippian culture. This mound appears to have been the main ceremonial and residential mound for the religious and political leaders; it is more than 100 feet (30 m) tall and is the largest pre-Columbian earthwork north of Mexico. This site had numerous mounds, some with conical or ridge tops, as well as palisaded stockades protecting the large settlement and elite quarter. At its maximum about 1150 CE, Cahokia was an urban settlement with 20,000–30,000 people.

A depiction of the Serpent Mound in southern Ohio, as published in the magazine The Century, April 1890

Some effigy mounds were constructed in the shapes or outlines of culturally significant animals. The most famous effigy mound, Serpent Mound in southern Ohio, ranges from 1 foot (0.30 m) to just over 3 feet (0.91 m) tall, 20 feet (6.1 m) wide, more than 1,330 feet (410 m) long, and shaped as an undulating serpent.

Early descriptions

Illustration of the Parkin site, thought to be the capital of the province of Casqui visited by de Soto

Between 1540 and 1542, Hernando de Soto, the Spanish conquistador, traversed what became the southeastern United States. There he encountered many different mound-builder peoples who were perhaps descendants of the great Mississippian culture. De Soto observed people living in fortified towns with lofty mounds and plazas and surmised that many of the mounds served as foundations for priestly temples. Near present-day Augusta, Georgia, de Soto encountered a group ruled by the Lady of Cofitachequi. She told him that the mounds within her territory served as burial places for nobles.

Engraving after Jacques le Moyne, showing the burial of a Timucua chief

The artist Jacques le Moyne, who had accompanied French settlers to northeastern Florida during the 1560s, likewise noted Native American groups using existing mounds and constructing others. He produced a series of watercolor paintings depicting scenes of native life. Although most of his paintings have been lost, some engravings were copied from the originals and published in 1591 by a Flemish company. Among these is a depiction of the burial of an aboriginal Floridian tribal chief, an occasion of great mourning and ceremony. The original caption reads:

Sometimes the deceased king of this province is buried with great solemnity, and his great cup from which he was accustomed to drink is placed on a tumulus with many arrows set about it.

—Jacques le Moyne, 1560s

Maturin Le Petit, a Jesuit priest, met the Natchez people, as did Le Page du Pratz (1758), a French explorer. Both observed them in the area that today is known as Mississippi. The Natchez were devout worshippers of the sun. Having a population of some 4,000, they occupied at least nine villages and were presided over by a paramount chief, known as the Great Sun, who wielded absolute power. Both observers noted the high temple mounds that the Natchez had built so that the Great Sun could commune with God, the sun. His large residence was built atop the highest mound, from "which, every morning, he greeted the rising sun, invoking thanks and blowing tobacco smoke to the four cardinal directions".[3][4][5]

Archaeological surveys

A depiction of the Portsmouth Earthworks in Ancient Monuments of the Mississippi Valley

The most complete reference for these earthworks is Ancient Monuments of the Mississippi Valley, written by Ephraim G. Squier and Edwin H. Davis. It was published in 1848 by the Smithsonian Institution, which had commissioned the survey. Since many of the features that the authors documented have been destroyed or diminished by farming and development, their surveys, sketches, and descriptions are still used by modern archaeologists. All of the sites that they identified as located in Kentucky came from the manuscripts of Constantine Samuel Rafinesque.

Chronology

Archaic era

Main article: Archaic period in the Americas

Illustration of Watson Brake, the oldest known mound complex in North America

Illustration of Poverty Point in West Carroll Parish, Louisiana

Radiocarbon dating has established the age of the earliest Archaic mound complex in southeastern Louisiana. One of the two Monte Sano Site mounds, excavated in 1967 before being destroyed for new construction at Baton Rouge, was dated at 6220 BP (plus or minus 140 years).[6] Researchers at the time thought that such hunter-gatherer societies were not organizationally capable of this type of construction.[6] It has since been dated as about 6500 BP or 4500 BCE,[7] although not all agree.[8]

Watson Brake is located in the floodplain of the Ouachita River near Monroe in northern Louisiana. Securely dated to about 5,400 years ago (around 3500 BCE), in the Middle Archaic period, it consists of a formation of 11 mounds from 3 feet (0.91 m) to 25 feet (7.6 m) tall, connected by ridges to form an oval nearly 900 feet (270 m) across.[9] In the Americas, the building of complex earthwork mounds started at an early date, well before the pyramids of Egypt were constructed. Watson Brake was being constructed nearly 2,000 years before the better-known Poverty Point, and the building continued for 500 years.[9] Middle Archaic mound construction seems to have ceased about 2800 BCE. Scholars have not ascertained the reason, but it may have been because of changes in river patterns or other environmental factors.[10]

With the 1990s dating of Watson Brake and similar complexes, scholars established that pre-agricultural, pre-ceramic American societies could organize to accomplish complex construction during extended periods, invalidating scholars' traditional ideas of Archaic society.[11] Watson Brake was built by a hunter-gatherer society, the people of which occupied this area only on a seasonal basis. Successive generations organized to build the complex mounds over 500 years. Their food consisted mostly of fish and deer, as well as available plants.

Poverty Point, built about 1500 BCE in what is now Louisiana, is a prominent example of Late Archaic mound-builder construction (around 2500 BCE – 1000 BCE). It is a striking complex of more than 1 square mile (2.6 km<sup>2</sup>), where six earthwork crescent ridges were built in concentric arrangement, interrupted by radial aisles. Three mounds are also part of the main complex, and evidence of residences extends for about 3 miles (4.8 km) along the bank of Bayou Macon. It is the major site among 100 associated with the Poverty Point culture and is one of the best-known early examples of earthwork monumental architecture. Unlike the localized societies during the Middle Archaic, this culture showed evidence of a wide trading network outside its area, which is one of its distinguishing characteristics.

The Tomoka Mound Complex on the St. Johns River in Florida included a mound constructed between 4629 and 4000 BP (2679 to 2050 BCE).[12] Horr's Island in Southwest Florida included a burial mound dated to 3400 BCE, making it the oldest known burial mound in North America.[13]

Woodland period

Grave Creek Mound, Moundsville, West Virginia, Adena culture

The oldest mound associated with the Woodland period was the mortuary mound and pond complex at the Fort Center site in Glade County, Florida. Excavations and dating in 2012 by Thompson and Pluckhahn show that work began around 2600 BCE, seven centuries before the mound-builders in Ohio.

The Archaic period was followed by the Woodland period (circa 1000 BCE). Some well-understood examples are the Adena culture of Ohio, West Virginia, and parts of nearby states. The subsequent Hopewell culture built monuments from present-day Illinois to Ohio; it is renowned for its geometric earthworks. The Adena and Hopewell were not the only mound-building peoples during this period. Contemporaneous mound-building cultures existed throughout what is now the Eastern United States, stretching as far south as Crystal River in western Florida. During this time, in parts of present-day Mississippi, Arkansas, and Louisiana, the Hopewellian Marksville culture degenerated and was succeeded by the Baytown culture.[14] Reasons for degeneration include attacks from other tribes or the impact of severe climatic changes undermining agriculture.

Coles Creek culture

Main article: Coles Creek culture

The Coles Creek culture is a Late Woodland culture (700–1200 CE) in the Lower Mississippi Valley in the Southern United States that marks a significant change in the cultural history of the area. Population and cultural and political complexity increased, especially by the end of the Coles Creek period. Although many of the classic traits of chiefdom societies had not yet developed, by 1000 CE, the formation of simple elite polities had begun. Coles Creek sites are found in Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Mississippi, and Texas. The Coles Creek culture is considered ancestral to the Plaquemine culture.[15][16]

Mississippian cultures

Main article: Mississippian culture

Around 900–1450 CE, the Mississippian culture developed and spread through the Eastern United States, primarily along the river valleys.[17] The largest regional center where the Mississippian culture was first definitely developed is located in Illinois along a tributary of the Mississippi and is referred to as Cahokia. It had several regional variants including the Middle Mississippian culture of Cahokia, the South Appalachian Mississippian variant at Moundville and Etowah, the Plaquemine Mississippian variant in south Louisiana and Mississippi,[18] and the Caddoan Mississippian culture of northwestern Louisiana, eastern Texas, and southwestern Arkansas.[19] Like the mound builders of the Ohio, these peoples built gigantic mounds as burial and ceremonial places.[20]

Fort Ancient culture

Fort Ancient is the name for a Native American culture that flourished from 1000 to 1650 CE among a people who predominantly inhabited land along the Ohio River in areas of modern-day southern Ohio, northern Kentucky, and western West Virginia.

Plaquemine culture

Main article: Plaquemine culture

A continuation of the Coles Creek culture in the lower Mississippi River Valley in western Mississippi and eastern Louisiana. Examples include the Medora site in West Baton Rouge Parish, Louisiana; and the Anna and Emerald Mound sites in Mississippi. Sites inhabited by Plaquemine peoples continued to be used as vacant ceremonial centers without large village areas much as their Coles Creek ancestors had done, although their layout began to show influences from Middle Mississippian peoples to the north. The Winterville and Holly Bluff (Lake George) sites in western Mississippi are good examples that exemplify this change of layout, but a continuation of site usage.[21] During the Terminal Coles Creek period (1150 to 1250 CE), contact increased with Mississippian cultures centered upriver near the future St. Louis, Missouri. This resulted in the adaption of new pottery techniques, as well as new ceremonial objects and possibly new social patterns during the Plaquemine period.[22] As more Mississippian cultural influences were absorbed, the Plaquemine area as a distinct culture began to shrink after CE 1350. Eventually, the last enclave of purely Plaquemine culture was the Natchez Bluffs area, while the Yazoo Basin and adjacent areas of Louisiana became a hybrid Plaquemine-Mississippi culture.[23] This division was recorded by Europeans when they first arrived in the area. In the Natchez Bluffs area, the Taensa and Natchez people had held out against Mississippian influence and continued to use the same sites as their ancestors. The Plaquemine culture is considered directly ancestral to these historic period groups encountered by Europeans.[24] Groups who appear to have absorbed more Mississippian influence were identified as those tribes speaking the Tunican, Chitimachan, and Muskogean languages.[22]

Disappearance

See also: Mississippian shatter zone

Following the description by Jacques le Moyne in 1560,[25] the mound-building cultures seem to have disappeared within the next century. However, there were also other European accounts, earlier than 1560, that give a first-hand description of the enormous earth-built mounds being constructed by Native Americans. One of them was Garcilaso de la Vega (c.1539–1616), a Spanish chronicler also known as "El Inca" because of his Incan mother. He was the record-keeper of the noted De Soto expedition that landed in present-day Florida on May 31, 1538. Garcilaso gave a first-hand description in his Historia de la Florida[26] (published in 1605, Lisbon, as La Florida del Inca) describing how the Indians had built mounds and how the Native American mound cultures practiced their traditional way of life.[26] De la Vega's accounts also include vital details about the Native American tribes' systems of government present in the southeast, tribal territories, and the construction of mounds and temples.[26] A few French expeditions in the 1560s[25] reported staying with Indian societies who had built mounds.[27]

Diseases

Later explorers to the same regions, only a few decades after mound-building settlements had been reported, found the regions largely depopulated with its residents vanished and the mounds untended. Conflicts with Europeans were dismissed by historians as the major cause of population reduction since few clashes had occurred between the natives and the Europeans in the area during the same period. The most widely accepted explanation today is that new infectious diseases brought from the Old World, such as smallpox and influenza, had decimated most of the Native Americans from the last mound-builder civilization, as they had no immunity to such diseases.[28][29][30][31]

The Fort Ancient culture of the Ohio River valley is considered a "sister culture" of the Mississippian horizon, or one of the "Mississippianised" cultures adjacent to the main area of the mound building cultures. This culture was also mostly extinct in the 17th century, but remnants may have survived into the first half of the 18th century.

While this culture shows strong Mississippian influences, its bearers were most likely ethnolinguistically distinct from the Mississippians, possibly belonging to the Siouan phylum. The only tribal name associated with the Fort Ancient culture in the historical record is the Mosopelea, recorded by Jean-Baptiste-Louis Franquelin in 1684 as inhabiting eight villages north of the Ohio River.

The Mosopelea is most likely identical to the Ofo (Oufé, Offogoula) recorded in the same area in the 18th century. The Ofo language was formerly classified as Muskogean but is now recognized as an eccentric member of the Western Siouan phylum. The late survival of the Fort Ancient culture is suggested by the remarkable amount of European-made goods in the archaeological record. Such artifacts would have been acquired by trade even before direct European contact. These artifacts include brass and steel items, glassware, and melted down or broken goods reformed into new items.

The Fort Ancient peoples are known to have been severely affected by disease in the 17th century (Beaver Wars period). Carbon dating seems to indicate that they were wiped out by successive waves of disease.

Massacre and revolt

Because of the disappearance of the cultures by the end of the 17th century, the identification of the bearers of these cultures was an open question in 19th-century ethnography. Modern stratigraphic dating has established that the "Mound builders" have spanned an extended period of more than five millennia so that any ethnolinguistic continuity is unlikely. The spread of the Mississippian culture from the late 1st millennium CE most likely involved cultural assimilation, in archaeological terminology called "Mississippianised" cultures.

19th-century ethnography assumed that the Mound-builders were an ancient prehistoric race with no direct connection to the Southeastern Woodland peoples of the historical period who were encountered by Europeans. A reference to this idea appears in the poem "The Prairies" (1832) by William Cullen Bryant.[32]

The cultural stage of the Southeastern Woodland natives encountered in the 18th and 19th centuries by British colonists was deemed incompatible[26] with the comparatively advanced stone, metal, and clay artifacts of the archaeological record.[27] The age of the earthworks was also partly over-estimated.

Caleb Atwater's misunderstanding of stratigraphy caused him to significantly overestimate the age of the earthworks. In his book, Antiquities Discovered in the Western States (1820), Atwater claimed that "Indian remains" were always found right beneath the surface of the earth, while artifacts associated with the Mound Builders were found fairly deep in the ground. Atwater argued that they must be from a different group of people. The discovery of metal artifacts further convinced people that the Mound Builders were not identical to the Southeast Woodland Native Americans of the 18th century.[27]

It is now thought that the most likely bearers of the Plaquemine culture, a late variant of the Mississippian culture, were ancestral to the related Natchez and Taensa peoples.[33] The Natchez language is a language isolate.

The Natchez are known to have historically occupied the Lower Mississippi Valley. They are first mentioned in French sources of around 1700, when they were centered around the Grand Village close to present-day Natchez, Mississippi. In 1729 the Natchez revolted and massacred the French colony of Fort Rosalie. The French retaliated by destroying all the Natchez villages. The remaining Natchez fled in scattered bands to live among the Chickasaw, Creek, and Cherokee people. They traveled with them on the Trail of Tears when federal Indian removal policies after 1830 forced the Native Americans out of the Southeast and west of the Mississippi River to Indian Territory (admitted in the early 20th century as the state of Oklahoma). The Natchez language became extinct in the 20th century, with the death in 1957 of the last known native speaker, Nancy Raven.

The myth of the Mound Builders

Based on the idea that the origins of the mound builders lay with a mysterious ancient people, various other suggestions were belonging to the more general genre of Pre-Columbian trans-oceanic contact theories, specifically involving Vikings, Atlantis, and the Ten Lost Tribes of Israel, summarised by Feder (2006) under the heading of "The Myth of a Vanished Race".[27]

Benjamin Smith Barton in his Observations on Some Parts of Natural History (1787) proposed the theory that the Mound Builders were associated with "Danes", i.e. with the Norse colonization of North America. In 1797, Barton reconsidered his position and correctly identified the mounds as part of indigenous prehistory.

Notable for the association with the Ten Lost Tribes is the Book of Mormon (1830). This provides a related belief, as its narrative describes two major immigrations to the Americas from Mesopotamia: the Jaredites (ca. 3000 - 2000 BCE) and an Israelite group during 590 BCE (termed Nephites, Lamanites and Mulekites). While the Nephites, Lamanites, and Mulekites were all of Jewish origin coming from Israel around 590 BCE, the Jaredites were a non-Abrahamic people separate in all aspects, except in a belief in Jehovah, from the Nephites. The Book of Mormon depicts these settlers building magnificent cities, which were destroyed by warfare about CE 385. The Book of Mormon can be placed in the tradition of the "Mound-Builder literature" of the period and has been called "the most famous and certainly the most influential of all Mound-Builder literature".[34]

Josiah Priest's 1833 400-page publication American Antiquities centered around his study of the Bible and antiquarian journals, supplemented by information from his travels. After visiting earthworks in Ohio and New York, Priest concluded that these mounds could be traced back to a lost race that had inhabited America even before the Native Americans. This idea is now referred to as the "mound builder myth" and still has supporters in society today. The book grew in popularity because of Priest's views on Native Americans. "It tapped into the widely accepted view of those times that Native Americans were merely bloodthirsty savages, bent on the destruction of all but their own race. It was inconceivable to Priest and like-minded men that a race so lazy and inept could conceive and build such huge, elaborate structures." [35] Priest speculated that the original dwellers could be the Ten Lost Tribes of Israel.[36]

The reasoning Priest gives for his conclusion that there was an even earlier settler than the Native Americans relies upon his interpretation of the Biblical flood story. According to Priest, after the great flood disappeared, Noah and his ark landed in America. While surveying the land, Noah also discovered mounds that had been constructed before the waters rose. Upon seeing this, Noah questioned where these agricultural phenomena came from. "Surveying the various themes of mound builder origins, he could not decide whether the mounds were the work of Polynesians, Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, Israelites, Scandinavians, Welsh, Scotts, or Chinese, although he felt certain the Indians had not built them." [37] Priest's racism has also been discussed in detail by author Robert Silverberg, [38] archaeologist Stephen Williams, [39] and author Jason Colavito. [40] Later authors placing the Book of Mormon in this context include Silverberg (1969), [41] Brodie (1971), [42] Kennedy (1994), [43] and Garlinghouse (2001). [44]

Some nineteenth-century archaeological finds (e.g., earth and timber fortifications and towns, [45] the use of a plaster-like cement, [46] ancient roads, [47] metal points and implements, [48] copper breastplates, [49] head-plates, [50] textiles, [51] pearls, [52] native North American inscriptions, North American elephant remains etc.) were well-publicized at the time of the publication of the Book of Mormon and there is the incorporation of some of these ideas into the narrative. References are made in the Book of Mormon to a then-current understanding of pre-Columbian civilizations, including the formative Mesoamerican civilizations such as the (Pre-Classic) Olmec, Maya, and Zapotec.

Lafcadio Hearn in 1876 wrote about a theory that the mounds were built by people from the lost continent of Atlantis. [27] [53] The Reverend Landon West in 1901 claimed that the Serpent Mound in Ohio was built by God, or by man inspired by him. He believed that God built the mound and placed it as a symbol of the story of the Garden of Eden. [54] [55]

More recently, Black nationalist websites claiming association with the Moorish Science Temple of America, have taken up the Atlantean ("Mu") association of the Mound Builders. [56] Similarly, the "Washitaw Nation", a group associated with the Moorish Science Temple of America established in the 1990s, has been associated with mound-building in Black nationalist online articles of the early 2000s. [57]

In a January 2023 episode of Tucker Carlson's Fox Nation show Tucker Carlson Today had a guest who stated that: "They didn't build 'em. Someone before them built 'em". Carlson replied: "That's right" and said there was "skeletal evidence of people who bear no genetic resemblance to the current Indians". [58]

Newark Holy Stone

Keystone

On June 29, 1860, David Wyrick, the surveyor of Licking County near Newark, discovered the so-called "Keystone" in a shallow excavation at the monumental Newark Earthworks, which is an extraordinary set of ancient geometric enclosures created by Indigenous people.[59] There he dug up a four-sided, plumb-bob-shaped stone with Hebrew letters engraved on each of its faces. The local Episcopal minister John W. McCarty translated the four inscriptions as "Law of the Lord", "Word of the Lord", "Holy of Holies", and "King of the Earth". Charles Whittlesey, who was one of the foremost archaeologists at that time, pronounced the stone to be authentic. The Newark Holy Stones, if genuine, would provide support for monogenesis, since they would establish that American Indians could be encompassed within Biblical history.

Decalogue Stone

After his first expedition, Wyrick uncovered a small stone box that was found to contain an intricately carved slab of black limestone covered with archaic-looking Hebrew letters along with a representation of a man in flowing robes. When translated, once again by McCarty, the inscription was found to include the entire Ten Commandments, and the robed figure was identified as Moses. Naturally enough, it became known as the Decalogue Stone.

Rather than being found beneath only a foot or two of soil, the Decalogue Stone was claimed to have been buried beneath a forty-foot-tall stone mound. Instead of modern Hebrew typography, the characters on the stone were blocky and appeared to be an ancient form of the Hebrew alphabet. Finally, the stone bore no resemblance to any modern Masonic artifact. In 1870, Whittlesey declared finally that the Holy Stones and other similar artifacts were "Archaeological Frauds".[60]

Giants

In 19th-century America, many popular mythologies surrounding the origin of the mounds were in circulation, typically involving the mounds being built by a race of giants. A New York Times article from 1897 described a mound in Wisconsin in which a giant human skeleton measuring over 9 feet (2.7 m) in length was found.[61] In 1886, another New York Times article described water receding from a mound in Cartersville, Georgia, which uncovered acres of skulls and bones, some of which were said to be gigantic. Two thigh bones were measured with the height of their owners estimated at 14 feet (4.3 m).[62] President Abraham Lincoln referred to the giants whose bones fill the mounds of America.

But still there is more. It calls up the indefinite past. When Columbus first sought this continent – when Christ suffered on the cross – when Moses led Israel through the Red-Sea – nay, even, when Adam first came from the hand of his Maker – then as now, Niagara was roaring here. The eyes of that species of extinct giants, whose bones fill the mounds of America, have gazed on Niagara, as ours do now. Co[n]temporary with the whole race of men, and older than the first man, Niagara is strong, and fresh to-day as ten thousand years ago. The Mammoth and Mastodon – now so long dead, that fragments of their monstrous bones, alone testify, that they ever lived, have gazed on Niagara. In that long – long time, never still for a single moment. Never dried, never froze, never slept, never rested.[63]

The antiquarian author William Pidgeon in 1858 created fraudulent surveys of mound groups that did not exist.[64] Beginning in the 1880s, the supposed origin of the earthworks with a race of giants was increasingly recognized as spurious. Pidgeon's fraudulent claims about the archaeological record were shown to be a hoax by Theodore Lewis in 1886.[65] A major factor contributing to public acceptance of the earthworks as a regular part of North American prehistory was the 1894 report by Cyrus Thomas of the Bureau of American Ethnology. Earlier authors making a similar case include Thomas Jefferson, who excavated a mound and from the artifacts and burial practices, noted similarities between mound-builder funeral practices and those of Native Americans in his time.

Walam Olum

The Walam Olum hoax had considerable influence on perceptions of the Mound Builders. In 1836, Constantine Samuel Rafinesque published his translation of a text he claimed had been written in pictographs on wooden tablets. This text explained that the Lenape Indians originated in Asia, told of their passage over the Bering Strait, and narrated their subsequent migration across the North American continent. This "Walam Olum" tells of battles with native peoples already in America before the Lenape arrived. People hearing of the account believed that the "original people" were the Mound Builders and that the Lenape overthrew them and destroyed their culture. David Oestreicher later asserted that Rafinesque's account was a hoax. He argued that the Walam Olum glyphs were derived from Chinese, Egyptian, and Mayan alphabets. Meanwhile, the belief that the Native Americans destroyed the mound-builder culture had gained widespread acceptance.

The main content of the image is a text-heavy article discussing the topic of homosexuality and its potential for transmission by parasites. The text is in a mix of English and what appears to be a non-English language, possibly Spanish. The text is written in a casual, conversational tone, and it discusses the concept of homosexuality as a potential risk for transmission of parasites.

The text is divided into paragraphs, with the first paragraph starting with "Instantly de-evolutionary timescales." The second paragraph continues with "Yes, parasites. Take for example Tourguimen Goo..." and so on, with the text being in a mix of English and the non-English language.

The image also includes a small image of a human foot, which is partially visible and appears to be a close-up of a sock. The image is overlaid on the text, and the foot is located in the upper left corner of the image. The image is not clear enough to discern any details about the foot or the sock.

The main content of the post is a collage of three separate images. The first image is a close-up of a person's face, wearing a striped shirt and black pants, with a black and white striped hat. The second image is a selfie of the same person, taken from a different angle, showing the person in a striped shirt and black pants, with a black and white striped hat. The third image is a close-up of a person's face, wearing a colorful wig and a black and white striped hat.

At the bottom of the post, there are two social media icons: a heart and a thumbs-up, indicating engagement. The post has a timestamp of "5:33 PM, Jan 25, 2020" and a view count of "381K". The overall style of the image is a combination of text and visual content, with the text providing context and the images providing visual information.

The image is a digital illustration featuring two characters. The character on the left is a young girl with brown hair, wearing a white shirt with a green collar and a green sash. She has a surprised expression and is looking up at the character on the right, who is holding a blue object with a green and yellow design, resembling a bug or insect. The character on the right has a large, colorful eye with a rainbow-like pattern, and her expression is one of surprise or shock. The background is plain white, and there are small, white speech bubbles above the characters, indicating that they are engaged in a conversation. The style of the image is reminiscent of anime or manga, with a focus on character expressions and vibrant colors.

There are some anti-worm foods you can eat. And there are some herbs that taste terrible but historically have been used for deworming such as Wormwood and Wormseed.

Some anti-worm foods you can try:

Papaya seeds and fruit

Pineapple core and fruit

Figs

Pumpkin seeds

Watermelon seeds

Bitter melon seeds

Pomegranate

Coconut

Cloves

Better if you can include multiple of these in one meal. Like oatmeal with coconut flakes, pumpkin seeds and papaya seeds (very tasty)

You're gonna have to inspect the toilet bowl most likely. But sometimes people just blast out a massive pile of worms and it's super obvious what's happening

The image is a photograph with a text overlay. The photograph shows a group of people, including a woman with blonde hair and a man wearing sunglasses, seated in what appears to be an indoor setting, possibly a stadium or a sports arena. The woman is wearing a white tank top and has her hair in a ponytail. The man in the foreground is wearing a dark-colored shirt with the word "ASTROS" visible on it. The woman is looking towards the man, and the man is looking at the woman with a slight smile. The background is blurred, but it seems to be an indoor environment with seating and a scoreboard.

The text overlay on the image is a quote that reads: "So basically the world is controlled by parasitic mind bending sentient worms. They spread through degenerate behavior, which explains homosexuality, pedophilia, and the rest of the evidence of their existence. There is no cure for this, and the people in charge don't want you to know. The cure is really simple, just take some de-worming medication and wait a week. And that's why we're not doing anal tonight."

The style of the image is a combination of a photograph and a text overlay, with the photograph capturing a moment in time, and the text providing a commentary on the content of the photograph. The text is in a bold, sans-serif font, which stands out against the background of the photograph. The overall tone of the image is serious and critical, as indicated by the text.

Why is Wormwood called Wormwood (Or Wormwort)?

Because is a herb (wort) for worms.

Many of the Artemisia species have common names related to deworming.

A closely related species is Mugwort.

Mug is another old name for worms.

Mug (worm/fly) Wort (herb)

There are many other herbs with Worm in their name that also kill worms. Such as wormseed, also known as epazote

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dysphania\_ambrosioides

Epazote essential oil contains many terpenes that are effective against worms, such as Ascaridole

<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ascaridole>

Which is called ascaridole because it is effective against Ascaris - the most common human roundworm.

I can dive deep on any other deworming plant I have mentioned, if you like. Always happy to help (this is my favourite subject).

At the top of the image, there is a text overlay that reads "DIY CHAI SPICE" in white capital letters. Below the text, there is a list of spices and ingredients, each with a label that includes the name of the spice or ingredient, followed by a description of its color and flavor. The spices and ingredients are arranged in a circular pattern, with the spices on the left and the ingredients on the right.

The spices include cardamom, ginger, nutmeg, cloves, cinnamon, and allspice. The ingredients include ground spices, nuts, and a spoon. The spices and ingredients are presented in a way that suggests they are ready to be used in a recipe, with the spices on the plate and the ingredients in a small glass jar to the right. The image has a clean and organized appearance, with a focus on the ingredients and spices, and the wooden surface provides a warm, natural tone to the overall image.

A great way to deworm is by regular consumption of masala chai tea

Cinnamon

Ginger

Cardamom

Mint

Allspice

Nutmeg

Even tea itself has antimicrobial properties. (That's why you can buy Listerine green tea mouthwash)

Chai is probably the tastiest way to incorporate deworming spices into your daily regimen

If you have an Arabic, Muslim or Middle Eastern store in your area you can probably find some natural deworming products there. Islamic medicine is very big on deworming.

They usually stock products such as Habbatussauda Sauda (Nigella seed), the actual seeds and/or the oil. Good for deworming.

Pomegranate (Delima) fruit, powder, seed and juice, also used for deworming.

Pumpkin seeds (pepitas) - I don't know their Arabic name.

Prunes and dates and dried fruit in general: good for gut health and detox.

Dried apricot seeds: kills worms pretty effectively.

They also often have essential oils such as cumin oil, clove oil, thyme oil, oregano oil, castor oil, cinnamon oil - these can also help with deworming.

Do some research before taking any of these products though, essential oils can be toxic in large doses. Better to use the natural herbs if possible

This is a good idea.

The classic "chemotherapy protocol" is also recommended for deworming in old medical literature.

That is 5 days on (medicine), two days off (no medicine).

Most deworming protocols say to deworm , then take a two week break and then repeat dosage, to kill off newly hatched larvae and break their reproduction cycle.

In my experience the first dosage kills off really big worms.

Then two weeks later, it kills very small worms. And eggs.

When the worms die off in a big way, it causes abdominal swelling and other histamine reactions like rashes, hives, and welts.

Yay!

What a pleasant subject!

Good stuff. Do you have a biofilm buster in your protocol?

In the OG wormpill / CDF protocol, they recommend using NAC, which is mucus-thinner and can help dislodge biofilms.

I didn't have much luck with NAC besides it making me cough up a ton of stuff.

But when I switched to using protease enzymes it made a huge difference.

Now I alternate between taking papain as a supplement, or just eating a lot of pineapple or papaya. I'm sure the fiber helps also.

Some anons in these threads also recommend mild laxatives like Epsom salts or senna tea. Maybe some magnesium supplement would help.

They're sometimes hard to spot in the toilet, it depends on what you've been eating.

Turpentine in the West has been used for deworming since Ancient Greek times.

It's a rich source of terpenes such as alpha- and beta-pinene which are plant defense compounds that can kill plant predators such as worms and insects.

In North America, traditional deworming remedies include birch, spruce and pine needle tea, which are brewed from the leaves of these conifer species that are high in pinene content.

Gum Turpentine is the distilled resin of these pine trees, rich in pinene content.

You can find pine needle tea at most health food stores. Even at Walmart.

They will often label it as good for "immune support". This is a codeword that means "kills parasites"

They are not allowed to mention parasites because that is a disease and the FDA forbids claiming cure for disease.

So they use vague terms like "immune support"

This "immune support" thing is actually pretty huge.

In the West we have psycho 1984 NWO regulations that prevent us from using certain words, even if they are appropriate and accurate.

You cannot label things as being a cure or claim they prevent disease, because products that cure or prevent disease are "drugs" and they fall under a bunch of regulations and can only be prescribed by a licensed medical practitioner.

For example: Vitamin C prevents scurvy. This is an absolute and undeniable medical fact. However you will never see a box of Vitamin C tablets mention the word scurvy. Because if they make this claim, as a curative of a disease, their product would be considered a drug and subject to extensive government regulations. And the price would skyrocket.

So instead we get vague terms like "immune support".

If you look at the ingredients of any supplements that claim "gut detox" and "immune support" you will often find they contain herbs that are known to be anti-parasitic.

They cannot use that word (parasite) because that would classify their product as a drug and therefore subject to heavier regulations.

Tldr : government sux and we live in the Matrix

Picrel: Pau D'arco is traditionally used for parasitic infections

Meditation thread.

Let us meditate together and channel into this thread.

As OP I will be delivering much of the energy.

Any are free to use the energy ITT. However, using it for maligned intent will result in a curse. Not saying you can't, it just won't be worth it.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a symbol that resembles a triangle with a dot in the center, forming a circle. The triangle is outlined in a lighter shade of purple, and the dot is white. The symbol is surrounded by a border that is also purple, with a pattern that includes small circles and lines. The background of the image is white. At the bottom of the image, there is text in black that reads "Brow or Third Eye Chakra Meditation" and below that, in smaller font, is the text "By CK Energy." The style of the image is simple and clean, with a focus on the symbol and the text.

I once moved beyond the known chakras in a moment of true belief. It goes on for infinity, as above so below too.

I experienced a oneness I never experienced before. My body temperature rose significantly, spirits whispered in my ears and I could hear them rather audibly rather than as thoughts.

Whispers of temptations, reassurances and portends.

I have tried again since then but have failed. So ITT I will just be sending the energy generated by the root which spills from the crown. As usual.

The image is a vibrant, abstract digital artwork featuring a central figure that appears to be a stylized representation of a character, possibly a cartoon or mascot, with a green body and a blue head. The character is standing in the center of a tunnel-like structure, which is filled with a multitude of lines and patterns in various colors, including red, orange, yellow, green, blue, and purple. The background of the image is a gradient of warm colors, transitioning from orange at the top to red at the bottom. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a psychedelic or digital art piece, characterized by its use of bright colors and intricate patterns.

There are lots of ways to meditate and a lot of ways to interpret what it actually is.

The first thing to master is feeling parts of your body without your hand, put your focus on a finger or a toe for example. Once you can do that anywhere in your body, look for the clusters of sense, or perhaps nerves if you are secular, and breathe while focusing on them one at a time. It should feel like you are breathing into them. The clusters are at the base of your spine to the brain and even at least one above that which requires the ability to have out of body experiences.

I doubt you need this information but I hope it being in this thread now satisfies your annoyance all the same. I know exactly what you're talking about and it requires a diligence to respond to such posters to reveal their intentions to lurkers and otherwise unknowing anons.

The image is a still from a cartoon or animated series, featuring a character with a stern expression and a determined look. The character is wearing a red and green fur-lined jacket with a fur collar, and the fur appears to be of a light color, possibly white or cream. The character's hair is dark and appears to be styled in a manner that suggests a sense of authority or power.

The character is holding a red object in their right hand, which appears to be a small, cylindrical object with a flame or light source at the top. The flame is bright and red, suggesting that the character is using it to light up or illuminate something.

The character's right hand is raised, with the fingers spread wide, as if in a gesture of emphasis or command. The text "Hey, as long as it works." is superimposed on the image, indicating that the character is speaking or addressing someone. The text is in a bold, white font that stands out against the darker background, which is a muted color, possibly gray or blue.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional animated character designs, with a focus on character expression and action. The character's attire and the text suggest a narrative context, possibly related to a story or a dialogue between characters.

The second time I ate mushrooms I experienced ego death, leading me to realize that I did not know what an ego is or does. I couldn't move my body, though my body was moving. I remember being very very thirsty but my body did nothing to address that thirst.

The third time I ate mushrooms I was visited by spectres in my mind that yelled at me.

I'll be meditating that the people of this thread see more obvious benefits from meditation and through this that they believe more in meditation. I did it in the opposite order at 5; I cemented into my unconscious via brain damage and memory memorization of an unusual manner I devised to respond VERY strongly emotionally in my unconscious to even very minute, seemingly trivial but very important steps in learning meditation, ESP and so on discovered by me via any means. I made it so I couldn't undo it even if I wanted and safeguarded it against extreme brain damage and every other threat, and thus I trained from my unconscious up to my conscious how to be psychic.

But I'll be meditating that you all get better at this and because of this synapses and other material will form in Creation among the alien planets and a tiny little bit in you that will make you much smarter in this one, specific, area, and some of that learning is applicable for other benefits for you.

I'm an amateur. I've meditated on and off for years but am on about a week of daily ~20-30 minutes right now. I can breathe into body segments, but as I focus on the individual I seem to lose track of the whole body. If I solely focus on breathing, I can achieve a euphoric whole body buzz, but recently I've grown to anticipate it, which seem to scare it away, and then I am trapped thinking about not thinking about it to get it to come back, and usually the session is fucked at that point.

I've experienced this too. When that is occurring I have to start from a small focus and build up. A full mind scan from the extremities of my appendages and along my torso, then from the root to the crown again, then all at once.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a stylized depiction of a humanoid figure with a large head and a small body. The figure has a yellow-brown skin tone and is depicted with a wide-open mouth, revealing sharp teeth. The eyes are large and have a white color, with a black pupil, giving the impression of intense focus or anger. The figure's head is tilted slightly to the left, and the neck is slightly curved, adding to the dynamic expression. The background is a solid red color, providing a stark contrast to the figure. The image is simple and cartoon-like, with no additional text or context provided.

How can you meditate if your body/nervous system isn't totally shut down while your awareness is awake?

If you aren't like this then you are just daydreaming/thinking and you aren't achieving anything.

Olfactory anon is right, you have to soothe your nervous system until you enter pure awareness state.

Meditating mindfully or Transcendental Meditation or whatever you want to call it, done effectively, gives one some control of the reward system in one's own brain. The greater utility lies in not just suppressing those signals you don't like but boosting those you do, but if you simply lower them all it can certainly lead to that apathetic response.

Furthermore if you lower your reward center activity enough it will respond to outside stimuli from other minds more than your own, and that combined with your desire to fit in means you want to fulfill people's expectations of you. I'll bet when people aren't really thinking about you they just expect you to be a somewhat too calm and nonengaging, disinterested and disinteresting person.

The image is a black and white illustration divided into four panels, each depicting a different scene related to energy exchange and visualization.

In the top left panel, there is a tree with a trunk that extends upwards, and a person is depicted standing on the trunk, seemingly reaching for something. The text above the image states, "The energy exchange in believing you can be with the tree in cycles especially in the third, sixth, ninth and so on."

The top right panel shows a person standing inside a hollowed-out tree, with a rope or string extending from the tree trunk to the person's hand. The text above the image states, "Your aura is an electromagnetic field that blends with all matter, in cycles especially in the third, sixth, ninth and so on."

The bottom left panel shows a person sitting on a circular platform with a rope or string extending from the platform to the person's hand. The text above the image states, "Your first option is to visualize that your energy is coming out bright white light that passes on to the tree of the tree."

The bottom right panel shows a person sitting on a circular platform with a rope or string extending from the platform to the person's hand. The text above the image states, "Simply place your back to the tree as you meditate and do."

Each panel has a simple, clean line drawing style, and the text is in a simple, sans-serif font. The image is likely intended to provide instructions or explanations related to energy exchange and visualization, with a focus on the concept of the aura and its connection to the tree.

In the foreground, a field of white flowers with blue centers is visible, adding a touch of color to the scene. The flowers appear to be in full bloom, suggesting that the image might have been taken during a time of year when such flowers are in bloom.

The image is rendered in a realistic style, with a focus on the textures and colors of the landscape and the house. The overall composition of the image suggests a peaceful and idyllic countryside setting, possibly from a fantasy or science fiction context. There are no texts or discernible actions in the image. The relative positions of the objects indicate that the house is the central focus, with the field of flowers leading the viewer's eye towards it. The trees and shrubs are scattered around the house, framing it and enhancing its prominence in the scene.

You're mostly right. It almost certainly isn't permanent though. This place is about change, the whole superstructure of this universe is like that. Maybe all universes. The higher up the chain you go the more reality reflects your inner self, until a thought manifests your entire environment. In the lower levels where it's harder to manifest with thought, your inner nature still determines where you end up, as you're drawn to places that reflect your nature. Evil people are drawn down, mediocre go to astral normieville, others go higher to more interesting or amazing places, and this is all like a great cosmic thresher, where souls experience as they like and need until they're ready to leave forever. I don't know the root reason why, but we're here to experience and learn and all that. Sorry for the bad explanation, I'm tired ;(

I would be wary about trying to harness entities and their "powers" for creative endeavors or really for anything in general. I spent a year reading and researching about trip reports and these entities and most of them are not to be trusted.

I read a thread on DMT Nexus from years ago where a guy got "recruited" by entities while taking psychedelics. They claimed he was special and needed to "ascend" to a higher state. These entities offered him psychic abilities in exchange for reverence and allocating mental real estate to them.

Eventually, the benevolent mask began to slip and the guy got uncomfortable. Before cutting off contact with the entities, they threatened him with severe harm like cancer and death of loved ones, etc.

It was probably bluffing but I still wouldn't trust them.

The image shows a close-up of a person's hand holding a piece of what appears to be a white, crystalline substance, possibly a piece of quartz or a similar mineral. The hand is positioned in such a way that the fingers are curled around the object, and the thumb is resting on the top of the object. The background is out of focus, with a hint of a chandelier or light fixture visible at the top. The lighting in the image is dim, with the light source coming from the top left corner, casting a soft glow on the hand and the object. The style of the image is candid and appears to be taken in a domestic setting, possibly a living room or a similar space. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image.

Then go for some club with psychotrance music and look for junkies or people looking as dealers. Ask for high quality euphoric crystal (4mmc for example) or MDMA

(preferably in clear crystal or high quality pills). Talk with some people there and ask them for selling groups on telegram or other private communicator. Be carefull, there are many people who will try to rob you or sell you some worthless crap instead of what you want.

First rule of junkie = never trust a junkie!

And don't take it more ofen than once per 2 months (crystal) and once per year (MDMA) or you will end with depression.

Befor sniffing melt the crystal in thingers to check if there is no glass in it.

The good stuff is clear, translucent or little white. Avoid mat, grey, brown or yellow shit, it is highly toxic. Don't take anything that starts with letter A.

Good luck and be carefull!

Psychedelic entities, UFOs, and alien sightings are mechanisms for "waking up" individuals to the broader reality of consciousness. These experiences are engineered by the consciousness system to help people realize the limits of their current understanding.

If you have bad habits, the machinations of your subconscious will be unpleasant. If you have good habits, then you've trained your subconscious to see through fear, thus won't be bothered by such entities.

I had a really weird trip a few weeks ago. It was my first time doing LemonTek. I'd never had such a visual trip in my life. Weirdly enough, I saw a lot of entities I had seen during one of my first trips 5 years ago. Whereas before I was just a witness, many of them seemed to recognize me. They felt welcoming. On two occasions, I came across two large groups of entities, they looked scary and evil as we would understand them if we saw them under normal circumstances. I separated their image from their intent and repeated to myself "I am that I am" and they let me be. Really the weirdest part was seeing familiar faces after the dozen or so trips that I've done in the past have been independent of each other, and I never felt like I had quite the level of interfacing with my surroundings that I did during that trip. I've experimented with macrodoses in the past but my experiences were largely incoherent, LemonTek gave me the most clarity relative to intensity I've felt yet. Dose was just 4.2g, interested in what could yield at 6-7g

The image is a black and white line drawing of a person with a large, angry expression. The person's face is drawn with exaggerated features, including a large nose, a wide mouth, and a frown. The person's eyes are narrowed, and the eyebrows are drawn in a downward direction. The person's hair is drawn in a simple, unkempt style.

Above the drawing, there is a text in a casual, informal font that reads: "I deliberately entered a thread full of things that I do not like, and now I am mad. How could this be happening to me?" The text is in a larger font size than the drawing, which is placed above the drawing.

The overall style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the emotions of the person depicted. The drawing is simple and lacks any additional context or background elements.

It seems more likely to me that only a mind trained with bad habits would think this way. The day-to-day consciousness may not realize how steeped in fear it is, but when psychedelics pierce the veil and the ego struggles to surrender, it may very well believe the entities it encounters are real and having a feast. Basically they feel like machinations of the paranoid subconscious.

Every single person (myself included) I know has never been happy since they stopped using it. I've done LSD/Shrooms/salvia/DMT/weed/benzos and a few RCs and if there was any I could go back and never take, it would be molly/mdma.

I would be wary about trying to harness entities and their "powers" for creative endeavors or really for anything in general. I spent a year reading and researching about trip reports and these entities and most of them are not to be trusted.

I read a thread on DMT Nexus from years ago where a guy got "recruited" by entities while taking psychedelics. They claimed he was special and needed to "ascend" to a higher state. These entities offered him psychic abilities in exchange for reverence and allocating mental real estate to them.

Eventually, the benevolent mask began to slip and the guy got uncomfortable. Before cutting off contact with the entities, they threatened him with severe harm like cancer and death of loved ones, etc.

It was probably bluffing but I still wouldn't trust them.

The image shows a close-up of a person's hand holding a piece of what appears to be a white, crystalline substance, possibly a piece of quartz or a similar mineral. The hand is positioned in such a way that the fingers are curled around the object, and the thumb is resting on the top of the object. The background is out of focus, with a hint of a chandelier or light fixture visible at the top. The lighting in the image is dim, with the light source coming from the top left corner, casting a soft glow on the hand and the object. The style of the image is candid and appears to be taken in a domestic setting, possibly a living room or a similar space. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image.

Then go for some club with psychotrance music and look for junkies or people looking as dealers. Ask for high quality euphoric crystal (4mmc for example) or MDMA

(preferably in clear crystal or high quality pills). Talk with some people there and ask them for selling groups on telegram or other private communicator. Be carefull, there are many people who will try to rob you or sell you some worthless crap instead of what you want.

First rule of junkie = never trust a junkie!

And don't take it more ofen than once per 2 months (crystal) and once per year (MDMA) or you will end with depression.

Befor sniffing melt the crystal in thingers to check if there is no glass in it.

The good stuff is clear, translucent or little white. Avoid mat, grey, brown or yellow shit, it is highly toxic. Don't take anything that starts with letter A.

Good luck and be carefull!

Psychedelic entities, UFOs, and alien sightings are mechanisms for "waking up" individuals to the broader reality of consciousness. These experiences are engineered by the consciousness system to help people realize the limits of their current understanding.

If you have bad habits, the machinations of your subconscious will be unpleasant. If you have good habits, then you've trained your subconscious to see through fear, thus won't be bothered by such entities.

I had a really weird trip a few weeks ago. It was my first time doing LemonTek. I'd never had such a visual trip in my life. Weirdly enough, I saw a lot of entities I had seen during one of my first trips 5 years ago. Whereas before I was just a witness, many of them seemed to recognize me. They felt welcoming. On two occasions, I came across two large groups of entities, they looked scary and evil as we would understand them if we saw them under normal circumstances. I separated their image from their intent and repeated to myself "I am that I am" and they let me be. Really the weirdest part was seeing familiar faces after the dozen or so trips that I've done in the past have been independent of each other, and I never felt like I had quite the level of interfacing with my surroundings that I did during that trip. I've experimented with macrodoses in the past but my experiences were largely incoherent, LemonTek gave me the most clarity relative to intensity I've felt yet. Dose was just 4.2g, interested in what could yield at 6-7g

The image is a black and white line drawing of a person with a large, angry expression. The person's face is drawn with exaggerated features, including a large nose, a wide mouth, and a frown. The person's eyes are narrowed, and the eyebrows are drawn in a downward direction. The person's hair is drawn in a simple, unkempt style.

Above the drawing, there is a text in a casual, informal font that reads: "I deliberately entered a thread full of things that I do not like, and now I am mad. How could this be happening to me?" The text is in a larger font size than the drawing, which is placed above the drawing.

The overall style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the emotions of the person depicted. The drawing is simple and lacks any additional context or background elements.

It seems more likely to me that only a mind trained with bad habits would think this way. The day-to-day consciousness may not realize how steeped in fear it is, but when psychedelics pierce the veil and the ego struggles to surrender, it may very well believe the entities it encounters are real and having a feast. Basically they feel like machinations of the paranoid subconscious.

Every single person (myself included) I know has never been happy since they stopped using it. I've done LSD/Shrooms/salvia/DMT/weed/benzos and a few RCs and if there was any I could go back and never take, it would be molly/mdma.

The image is a still from a video game or a movie, featuring a character who appears to be a male with short, dark hair. He has a serious expression on his face, and his eyes are wide open. He is wearing a white shirt with a blue collar and a blue jacket with a white collar. The character is looking off to the side, and there is a text overlay on the image that reads, "I have not come this far... to die now..." The text is in a bold, black font and is positioned in the lower right corner of the image. The background is a plain, light-colored wall. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the character's facial expression and the text overlay.

The image is a close-up of a stylized, cartoon-like character. The character has a light brown complexion, a small, round head with a slight bump on the top, and a small, round, brown nose. The eyes are large and oval-shaped, with a slight crease between them. The character's mouth is closed, and the eyebrows are slightly furrowed. The character is wearing a light-colored, possibly white, shirt with a collar and a visible button. The background is a blurred green, suggesting a room with a green door or wall. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a children's illustration or a character from a cartoon.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with blue hair and a serious expression. The character's eyes are wide open, and the eyebrows are raised, suggesting a sense of determination or resolve. The character's hair is styled in a way that it appears to be flowing, and the character's head is tilted slightly to the left. The character's skin tone is a light brown, and the hair color is a vibrant blue.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a text overlay that reads "I WILL GENOCIDE YOU." The text is in a bold, capitalized font and is colored in white, which stands out against the darker background of the image. The text is centered and appears to be a statement or a warning, possibly indicating a threat or a challenge. The overall style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the character's facial expression and the text.

In the center of the image, there is a graphic of a man in a military uniform with a medal around his neck. He has a serious expression and is looking directly at the viewer. To the right of the man, there is a graphic of a dog with a surprised expression, also looking at the viewer.

At the bottom of the image, there is a logo with the text "Guest Gene Decode" in white capital letters. The background of the image is a gradient of blue and white, with a starry sky and a planet in the background.

The overall style of the image is promotional and seems to be related to a discussion or interview, as suggested by the text and the presence of the man in the military uniform. The graphic elements, such as the medal and the surprised dog, are likely to represent the subject of the discussion, which is likely related to politics or world affairs.

It's conflicting. I see the way these people talk online and it worries me, what direction are they leading the world? Not talking about any specific agenda or belief, but it's clear they are filled with hate and want to march towards nothing. I know better than to intervene and cause even more stress for myself while others find a person to discount their rage over, but it feels like seeing a building slowly fall and not being able to do anything about it. I always see it as selfish for me to ignore these people and smile, but maybe it's the proper path I need to convince myself to follow. They use of their full capacities to spread hate and make the world worse, so I should first focus on the ones I care, build a fortress to protect us from what's coming, and then use this safety to search for any who can be helped. But certain mediums won't allow for these people to flourish, at least half the internet sadly.

I've been wondering whether it's due to algorithms or screen radiation, but in any case, this trend has been clearly observable since the widespread availability of internet-enabled smartphones to the population - at least as an outsider with no smartphone who is a bit older and was socialized at a time when events such as assassinations, disasters, or cases of corruption could still trigger genuine, lasting outrage. (((They))) couldn't lie to our faces as blatantly as they do today. And people had more time to think for themselves, instead of being bombarded with input, input, input until all the information turned into brain fog.

The Italian individual you're referring to appears to be Vincenzo Iozzo — an Italian cybersecurity expert born in Calabria who is known in the infosec community for his work in finding and demonstrating zero-day exploits and for founding a startup that was acquired by CrowdStrike in 2017.

Vincenzo Iozzo is an Italian cybersecurity researcher and entrepreneur originally from Calabria. He gained early recognition in the cybersecurity world by contributing to exploit development and participating in high-profile vulnerability competitions and research (e.g., Pwn2Own and co-authoring the *iOS Hacker's Handbook*).

Iozzo founded Iperlane, a mobile security company focused on security research and exploit development, which was acquired by CrowdStrike in 2017. After the acquisition, he took on a senior role (often described as Senior Director) at CrowdStrike for several years.

The acquisition was part of CrowdStrike's broader strategy to integrate advanced malware analysis and exploit research capabilities (related to what Payload Security UG did with Hybrid Analysis), and Iozzo's team and expertise contributed to that effort.

The image is a painting that depicts a surrealistic scene. At the center, there is a head with a profile view, and the face is partially obscured by a stack of playing cards. The cards are arranged in a pyramid shape, with the top card being a red diamond and the bottom card being a red heart. The background is a blend of warm colors, with a mix of red, yellow, and brown tones. There are also abstract elements and scribbles throughout the painting, adding to the overall surrealistic style. The style of the painting is reminiscent of the post-impressionist movement, characterized by its use of bold colors and expressive brushwork.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a stylized representation of a human heart. The heart is depicted in a vibrant red color with intricate details, including the intricate network of blood vessels and the intricate network of veins. The heart is set against a backdrop of a dark, starry sky with a radiant golden light emanating from the center, creating a sense of depth and luminosity. The heart is positioned in the center of the image, drawing the viewer's attention to its detailed structure. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of surrealism, with a dreamlike quality that adds to the mysterious and otherworldly atmosphere.

The image is a close-up photograph of a person's face, focusing on the upper part of the head and the upper part of the face. The individual appears to be wearing a dark-colored, possibly leather, mask with large, curved horns protruding from the top. The mask covers the person's eyes, nose, and mouth, and the person's mouth is open, revealing their teeth. The person's skin tone is a deep brown, and the lighting in the image casts a warm, golden hue, which contrasts with the dark mask. The background is blurred, suggesting a focus on the person's face. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the person's facial features and the mask.

The image is a screenshot of a text message exchange between two individuals. The text is in English and appears to be a part of a professional communication, possibly related to business or travel.

The top of the image shows a header with the sender's name, "Peter Thiel," and the date, "February 28, 2016," indicating the time of the message. Below the sender's name, there is a message body with a subject line that reads, "Certainly not in Saudi: just think I will avoid the Middle East for the next decade or so."

The body of the message continues with a message to the recipient, "Should be back on East Coast in late April/May—sometime in NYC or on island, then." The sender's email address, "jeffrey.e.mailto@yahoo.com," is provided at the bottom of the message. The bottom of the image shows a message to the recipient, "as you probably know, I represent the Rothchilds. I was hoping to figure out a way for the bank that has 160 b in cash to do something in tech. Best client list in the world, prehistoric products. It can wait, good luck in chicago. I'll be in Saudi Arabia in May. I hope to meet you in Saudi at the end of month?"

The text is in a standard font, and the message is in a formal tone, suggesting a professional or business context. The sender's message is followed by a message to the recipient, which is a mix of personal and professional, indicating a friendly or business relationship between the two individuals.

The image is a screenshot of a text in a language that appears to be Hebrew, with a section of text in English. The text is a breakdown of the term "Canaan" in the Hebrew language, with a focus on its geographical and historical context. The text is divided into several sections, each with a heading and a description of the term.

The heading "Here's a breakdown of the term: Canaan" is followed by a list of terms and their meanings. The first term listed is "Canaan (Kenaar): Refers to the geographical region in the ancient Near East." The second term is "Canaanite (Kenaar): The term for the inhabitants of Canaan." The third term is "Pharaohians: This seafaring people, who were among the most prominent Canaanites, were known as 'Kenaar' meaning 'Canaanites' and, in Hebrew, this word developed the specific meaning of 'merchant' or 'trader.'" The fourth term is "Etymology: The association of the word 'Kenaar' with trade is supported by various texts, including the Old Testament, where it appears alongside mentions of traffickers and merchants."

The text is presented in a structured format, with each term and its definition or explanation followed by a brief description. The text is in a larger font size compared to the surrounding text, which is likely to draw attention to the terms and their meanings. The overall style of the image is informational and academic, typical of academic or historical texts.

PEOPLE DONT SELL THERE SOUL TO THE DEVIL

Narrator: So Israel sold this device to Hezbollah. Hezbollah paid for this—this weapon that was to be used against them.

Michael: Then good price. A good price that couldn't be too low, or they'd be suspicious.

Narrator: In the end, Hezbollah bought over 16,000 of these exploding walkie-talkies that Israel then didn't activate for 10 years—until 3 months ago.

Narrator: How did you convince Hezbollah to buy this?

Michael: Well, obviously, they didn't know that they were buying it from Israel. Who did they buy it from, or think they were buying it from? We have an incredible array of possibilities of creating foreign companies that have no way been traced back to Israel. Shell companies over shell companies who affect the supply chain to our favor. We create a pretend world. We are a global production company. We write the screenplay. We're the directors with the producers. We're the main actors. And the world is our stage.

Narrator: This is Mossad's old office. Its motto, from Proverbs 24:6, says, in so many words, "wage war through deception and trickery."

Narrator: Mossad wanted to use the name Gold Apollo on its pager, so it set up shell companies—including one in this building in Hungary—to dupe the Taiwanese into partnering with them.

Narrator: So the company in Taiwan, Gold Apollo—did they know that they were working with people from Mossad?

Gabriel: Gold Apollo had zero clue that they are working with the Mossad. And neither did Hezbollah when they are buying from us—they have zero clue that they are buying from the Mossad.

>We make, like, Truman Show. Everything is controlled by us behind the scenes. In their experience, everything is normal. Everything was 100% culture—including businessmen, marketing, engineers, showroom, everything.

The main source of the story of Mot ("Death") is Ugaritic.[6][7] He is a son of 'El,[1] and according to instructions given by the god Hadad (Ba'al) to his messengers, lives in a city named hmry ('Mirey'), a pit is his throne, and Filth is the land of his heritage. But Ba'al warns them:

The image is a watercolor painting featuring a brown bear. The bear is depicted in a realistic style with a soft, textured appearance. It has a large, round head and a small, round body. The bear is walking on all fours, and its fur is depicted in a warm, earthy tone. The background is a light, neutral color, providing a contrast to the bear's brown fur.

To the right of the bear, there is a small, circular object with a brown center and a blue rim. The object appears to be a paintbrush with a few drops of paint on it, suggesting that the bear is being painted. The colors of the paint are not clearly visible, but the presence of the paintbrush and the bear's position suggest a painting process.

The image does not contain any text or additional elements. The style of the image is simple and focused on the bear and the paintbrush, with a clear emphasis on the process of painting. The overall composition is balanced, with the bear and the paintbrush occupying equal space in the frame.

In a philosophical creation myth, Sanchuniathon refers to a great wind that merged with its parents, and that connection was called 'Desire' (πόθος):

From its connection, Mot was produced, which some say is mud, and others a putrescence of watery compound; and out of this came every germ of creation and the generation of the universe. So there were certain animals which had no sensation, and out of them grew intelligent animals, and were called "Zophasemin", that is "observers of heaven"; and they were formed like the shape of an egg. Also Mot burst forth into light, and sun, and moon, and stars, and the great constellations.

The image depicts a grand, ornate structure that appears to be a part of a larger architectural ensemble. The structure is predominantly white, adorned with gold accents and intricate detailing. It features a large, arched doorway that is illuminated by a golden light, casting a dramatic glow on the surrounding area. The doorway is flanked by two statues of angels, one on each side, which are also golden and appear to be made of a reflective material.

The structure is set against a backdrop of a dark, stormy sky, with dark clouds and a bright, radiant light source, possibly a sun, shining through the clouds. The ground below the structure is wet, reflecting the light from the doorway and the surrounding area.

In the foreground, there are several people who appear to be walking or standing, although their faces are not visible. The overall atmosphere of the image is one of grandeur and mystery, with the structure and its surroundings suggesting a place of significance and awe. There are no discernible texts or brands in the image.

The image is a text excerpt from a document or a letter, written in English. The text appears to be a response to a person who has accused the author of being a "Biden supporter" and has been involved in "unethical activities" related to the COVID-19 pandemic. The author is expressing their frustration and concern about the actions of the person who has accused them.

The text is written in a formal and formal tone, with the author using a mix of capital letters and lowercase letters to emphasize certain points. The text is divided into two main sections. The first section is a response to the person who accused the author, and the second section is a statement about the author's own actions and intentions. The text includes several references to the COVID-19 pandemic, such as "the mask malfunctions on Biden," "who is posing with a fucking clone on Facebook," and "the people who are posting with a fucking clone on Facebook." These references suggest that the author is addressing the actions of the person who accused them and is using the pandemic as a backdrop for their response.

The text also includes a reference to a "DECALS" (presumably a typo for "DECADES") and a mention of "the link and info to the charity here," which suggests that the author is providing a way for the person who accused them to find more information about the charity they are associated with.

The text ends with a statement about the author's intentions and actions, stating that they are "going to end this on a positive note," and that they have been doing "nothing but helping criminals." The author also mentions that they have been "catching criminals" and "helping people in Nepal and children in Nepal."

The overall tone of the text is serious and accusatory, with the author expressing their frustration and concern about the actions of the person who accused them. The text does not provide any further details about the person who accused the author, and the author's intentions are not explicitly stated. The text ends with a call to action, suggesting that the author is seeking to resolve the situation and move forward.

The image shows a close-up of a scorpion's head and body, with the head positioned above a pile of small, white, segmented creatures that resemble scorpions. The scorpion's body is predominantly black with a yellow-orange hue, and it has a long, thin tail. The scorpion's head is facing downwards, and it has a sharp, curved horn-like structure on its head. The scorpion's body is covered in small, white, segmented scales. The background of the image is blurred, but it appears to be a sandy or sandy-colored surface. There is a watermark or logo in the top left corner of the image with the letter "P" inside a circle. The style of the image is a close-up photograph with a focus on the scorpion and its immediate surroundings.

The image displays a stone artifact with a carved surface, which appears to be a part of a Neolithic or early Bronze Age culture. The artifact is oval in shape and has a rough texture, suggesting it is made of stone. The carving on the artifact shows two figures, one of which is a snake, and the other is a bird. The snake figure is positioned to the left of the bird figure. The text on the image provides information about the artifact, stating that it is a Pre-Pottery Neolithic carved stone plaque depicting a snake, a human figure, and a bird. The text also mentions that the artifact is from Gobekli Tepe, c. 9500-8000 BC, and is owned by Gobekli Tepe, c. 9500-8000 BC. The image is a photograph with a black background, and there is a watermark at the bottom right corner that reads "View chapter." The style of the image is informative and educational, designed to provide viewers with a clear and detailed view of the artifact and its historical context.

The person, who presided over them, was a woman named OMOROCA;

which in the Chaldean language is THALATTH; in Greek THALASSA, THE SEA; but which might equally be interpreted the Moon. (En Na Na means Lord of two stones aka balls (two ball cain)like Venus Origin)

All things being in this situation, Belus came, and SPLIT the woman asunder: and of one half of her he formed the earth, and of the other half the heavens; and at the same time destroyed the animals within her. All this (he says) was an allegorical description of nature. -Berossus around 280bc

In Mesopotamian myth, Enlil is the god of the air child of An-ki who separates the primordial unity of heaven and earth.

An (sky) from Ki (earth) respectively. This act of separating An and Ki "created the universe"

The offspring of Anki that predate the splitting (Class Division) are called the Anu na ki aka Ani Na Ke (Originally called the Anunna) The Royal Elite.

This is Saturn castrating his father Uranus separating Uranus Heaven from his wife Gaia Earth so that he as Saturn may rule. This act also births Venus from Uranus's Ba'als

Born embracing each other, the air god Shu had to forcefully separate his children, the earth god Geb and the sky goddess Nut, to create space for the world and its inhabitants. Their close forbidden relationship continued even after the separation, leading to Geb and Nut having five children Osiris, Isis, Set, Horus, and Nephthys - Heliopolitan Ennead

The image displays a section of a relief sculpture, which appears to be a part of a larger artifact, possibly a relief panel or panel from a wall. The sculpture is carved from a material that has a reddish-brown hue, suggesting it may be made of stone or a similar material. The relief depicts a scene with figures engaged in various activities, some of which are dynamic and others more static.

The figures are arranged in a linear fashion, with some figures positioned in the foreground and others in the background. The figures are depicted in a variety of poses, with some standing upright, others in motion, and a few in a seated or reclining position. The figures are adorned with clothing and accessories, such as headdresses, necklaces, and bracelets, which are intricately detailed.

The style of the relief is reminiscent of ancient Egyptian or Mesopotamian art, characterized by the use of hieroglyphs and the depiction of deities and mythological figures. The figures are rendered with a high level of detail, suggesting a high level of craftsmanship and a focus on the narrative or story being told.

The background of the relief is not clearly visible, but it appears to be a continuation of the scene, with the same figures and activities depicted. The overall composition and style of the relief suggest it may be from a historical period, possibly from the ancient Near East, given the style of the figures and the use of hieroglyphs.

There are no discernible texts or inscriptions within the image, and the focus is solely on the visual depiction of the relief. The image does not provide any additional context or information about the location or the purpose of the relief.

The image is a black and white line drawing that depicts a scene from ancient times. At the center of the image, there is a figure that appears to be a man, wearing a long robe and a crown. He is holding a staff in one hand and a shield in the other, suggesting he is a warrior or a leader. The man is standing on a pedestal, which is elevated above the ground, indicating a sense of importance or stature.

The background of the image is plain and white, which contrasts with the black lines of the drawing, making the figures stand out. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the drawing is simple and appears to be a sketch or a preparatory drawing for a larger work, possibly a sculpture or a relief. The focus is on the figures and their interaction, with the background serving to highlight their importance.

The image is a still from a movie or television show, featuring two men standing in a grand hall with a large chandelier hanging from the ceiling. The man on the left is wearing a dark-colored shirt and has a serious expression, while the man on the right is wearing a plaid shirt and has a more relaxed posture. Both men are facing away from the camera, and the text overlay on the image reads: "Our projections show that by the year 2025, not only America but the entire planet will be under the protection and dominion of this power alliance." The text is in a bold, white font against a dark background, and it is centered on the image. The style of the image suggests it is a still from a film or television show, with a focus on the message conveyed by the text.

TARASOVSKY.COM," indicating the photographer's name and the website associated with the image.

The image is a photograph featuring a large, white, cloud-like formation in the sky, which appears to be a contrail, against a clear blue sky. The contrail is positioned centrally in the image and is slightly tilted to the right. Below the contrail, there is a calm body of water, reflecting the sky and the contrail. The reflection is clear and shows the contrail's outline. The overall composition of the image suggests a serene and peaceful atmosphere. There are no texts or other discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the natural elements of the sky and water.

shout out to my fellow numberfags

The cuneiform mi, (also mé) sign is a distinctive sign in the wedge-stroke group, and is used as a syllabic for mi, me, and an alphabetic for m, i, or e; it is also a Sumerogram (capital letter (majuscule)) for MI, used for Akkadian language, as "mūšu",[2] night. MI as mūšu, in the Epic of Gilgamesh, is used in (Chapters) Tablets I, II, III, and XII as either MI, or MI.MEŠ, a total of six times; mūšu in other sections is alphabetic/syllabic and used four times.[2]

The glyph itself can be found in the Epic of Gilgamesh as follows: mé-(1 time), mi-(126), MI-(9).[3]

3 of the 9 MI cant be accounted for in the public domain, and i dont feel like trying harder to search out why they cant be read as mūšu.

The first paragraph is titled "19. Tefillin and mezzozot may be written only in Assyrian script," and it begins with the phrase "Persianion was praised by a wise Tarsi in Greece," followed by a quote from the text. The second paragraph is titled "20. The text of the Tefillin and mezzozot is well," and it begins with the phrase "That Greek language has, however, been forgotten from the world."

The image also includes a series of Hebrew letters and symbols, which are likely part of the text. These symbols are not part of the English text but are used to represent the Hebrew language. The symbols are arranged in a grid-like pattern, with each symbol occupying a specific position on the page.

The overall style of the image is informational and academic, with a focus on the text and the symbols that represent the Hebrew language. The image is likely used for educational or scholarly purposes, such as a textbook or a reference guide.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a Hindu deity, Shiva, in a dynamic pose. Shiva is depicted with a large, curved trident in his right hand, and he is holding a flower in his left hand. He is wearing a red and gold robe with a golden necklace and a red and gold headdress. Shiva is seated on a white cow, which has a red and gold headdress and is adorned with a golden necklace. The background of the image is a gradient of purple and blue, with a mountainous landscape and a crescent moon visible in the top left corner.

At the bottom of the image, there is a text in a non-Latin script that reads "Ei" followed by a symbol resembling a cross, which is commonly associated with the Hindu deity Shiva. The text "Ei" is likely a transliteration of the name "Ei" in the non-Latin script, which is a common practice in Hindu iconography to represent the deity's name. The symbol next to the text is a stylized representation of a cross, which is also a common symbol in Hindu iconography.

The image is a part of a larger collection of images, as indicated by the text "Ei" and the symbol next to it, which suggests that this image is part of a larger set of images related to Shiva. The style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Hindu art, with its use of vibrant colors and symbolic imagery.

The figure is depicted with a long beard and is wearing a robe that is predominantly black with a golden border. The figure's eyes are closed, and their mouth is open, suggesting a moment of prayer or contemplation.

figure's head and shoulders positioned at the top of the map.

At the bottom of the image, there is a watermark that reads "BRIDGEMAN IMAGES," indicating the source of the image. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of early 20th-century art, with a focus on religious symbolism and a sense of grandeur. The overall composition and color scheme evoke a sense of historical or religious significance.

The image is a two-panel cartoon featuring the character Bart Simpson from the animated television series "The Simpsons." In the first panel, Bart is seated at a desk with a computer in front of him. He is wearing a light-colored shirt and has a mustache. His expression is one of frustration or anger, with his mouth open and eyes wide. The text above his head reads, "I'm an Elk, a Mason, a communist."

In the second panel, Bart is shown in a different pose, sitting at the same desk but with a different expression. He is now holding a piece of paper in his hand and appears to be reading it. His facial expression is more neutral, and his eyes are closed. The text above his head in this panel reads, "I'm the president of the Gay and Lesbian Alliance."

The background of both panels is a plain yellow, matching the color of the character's shirt. The style of the image is typical of the "The Simpsons" series, known for its satirical and humorous take on American culture.

The image is a black and white photograph of a circular emblem with a central triangle and two lines radiating from it. The triangle is divided into three equal parts, with the top part being the largest and the bottom part being the smallest. The lines emanating from the triangle form a semi-circle, with the top line being the longest and the bottom line being the shortest. The text "JEH BUL NO" is written in capital letters around the perimeter of the triangle, with "JEH" on the left, "BUL" in the center, and "NO" on the right. The background of the image is a textured, possibly stone-like surface, and the overall style of the image is reminiscent of a vintage or historical photograph.

How am I enjoying the fact the world being run by a power hungry cult of elites who rape kill and torture women and children wasn't that farfetched of a conspiracy? That they are so powerful they will likely get away with it. That the media we consume is curated for us to keep us divided. This is a powerhouse oligarchy that has been building for decades and we can't stop it.

I feel vindicated, but at what cost?

The image is a screenshot of a digital graphic, likely a constellation map, with a dark blue background and a starry sky. At the top of the image, there is a title in white text that reads "The Big Dipper." Below the title, there are four lines of text in white font, each representing a different season: "Summer," "Winter," "Spring," and "Fall." Each line is connected by a line of white dots, forming a star pattern.

In the center of the image, there is a large star with a white outline and a yellow center, which is labeled "NorthStar." This star is surrounded by four smaller stars, each with a white outline and a yellow center, forming a star pattern around the NorthStar.

At the bottom of the image, there is a paragraph of text in white font that provides an archaeological context for the constellation. The text reads: "Archaeological evidence, such as swastika symbols found on ancient cuneiform in Mesopotamia (dating back as far as 7000 B.C.), dating back as far as 7000 B.C."

The overall style of the image is informational and educational, likely intended for educational or scientific purposes. The use of a constellation map to represent the Big Dipper and the accompanying text provides a visual representation of the astronomical constellations and their significance in the context of the text.

The image is a screenshot of a text in a language that appears to be Hebrew, with a section of text in English. The text is a breakdown of the term "Canaan" in the Hebrew language, with a focus on its geographical and historical context. The text is divided into several sections, each with a heading and a description of the term.

The heading "Here's a breakdown of the term: Canaan" is followed by a list of terms and their meanings. The first term listed is "Canaan (Kenaar): Refers to the geographical region in the ancient Near East." The second term is "Canaanite (Kenaar): The term for the inhabitants of Canaan." The third term is "Pharaohians: This seafaring people, who were among the most prominent Canaanites, were known as 'Kenaar' meaning 'Canaanites' and, in Hebrew, this word developed the specific meaning of 'merchant' or 'trader.'" The fourth term is "Etymology: The association of the word 'Kenaar' with trade is supported by various texts, including the Old Testament, where it appears alongside mentions of traffickers and merchants."

The text is presented in a structured format, with each term and its definition or explanation followed by a brief description. The text is in a larger font size compared to the surrounding text, which is likely to draw attention to the terms and their meanings. The overall style of the image is informational and academic, typical of academic or historical texts.

PEOPLE DONT SELL THERE SOUL TO THE DEVIL

THEY SELL IT TO JUDEA

WHO OWNS ALL NATIONS ALL GODS ALL PEOPLE

Narrator: So Israel sold this device to Hezbollah. Hezbollah paid for this—this weapon that was to be used against them.

Michael: Then good price. A good price that couldn't be too low, or they'd be suspicious.

Narrator: In the end, Hezbollah bought over 16,000 of these exploding walkie-talkies that Israel then didn't activate for 10 years—until 3 months ago.

Narrator: How did you convince Hezbollah to buy this?

Michael: Well, obviously, they didn't know that they were buying it from Israel. Who did they buy it from, or think they were buying it from? We have an incredible array of possibilities of creating foreign companies that have no way been traced back to Israel. Shell companies over shell companies who affect the supply chain to our favor. We create a pretend world. We are a global production company. We write the screenplay. We're the directors with the producers. We're the main actors. And the world is our stage.

Narrator: This is Mossad's old office. Its motto, from Proverbs 24:6, says, in so many words, "wage war through deception and trickery."

Narrator: Mossad wanted to use the name Gold Apollo on its pager, so it set up shell companies—including one in this building in Hungary—to dupe the Taiwanese into partnering with them.

Narrator: So the company in Taiwan, Gold Apollo—did they know that they were working with people from Mossad?

Gabriel: Gold Apollo had zero clue that they are working with the Mossad. And neither did Hezbollah when they are buying from us—they have zero clue that they are buying from the Mossad.

>We make, like, Truman Show. Everything is controlled by us behind the scenes.

The text is in white against a black background, and the bubble is slightly tilted.

The style of the image is humorous, combining elements of political commentary with a light-hearted tone. The collage seems to be a commentary on the juxtaposition of political figures and the Jewish community.

The bear is walking on all fours, and its fur is depicted in a warm, earthy tone. The background is a light, neutral color, providing a contrast to the bear's brown fur.

To the right of the bear, there is a small, circular object with a brown center and a blue rim. The object appears to be a paintbrush with a few drops of paint on it, suggesting that the bear is being painted. The colors of the paint are not clearly visible, but the presence of the paintbrush and the bear's position suggest a painting process. The image does not contain any text or additional elements. The style of the image is simple and focused on the bear and the paintbrush, with a clear emphasis on the process of painting. The overall composition is balanced, with the bear and the paintbrush occupying equal space in the frame.

In a philosophical creation myth, Sanchuniathon refers to a great wind that merged with its parents, and that connection was called 'Desire' (πόθος):

From its connection, Mot was produced, which some say is mud, and others a putrescence of watery compound; and out of this came every germ of creation and the generation of the universe. So there were certain animals which had no sensation, and out of them grew intelligent animals, and were called "Zophasemin", that is "observers of heaven"; and they were formed like the shape of an egg. Also Mot burst forth into light, and sun, and moon, and stars, and the great constellations.

The image is a digital graphic with a predominantly white background. At the center of the image, there is a person with a greenish complexion, wearing a green shirt and a purple vest. The person has a white face with black eyes and a white smile. The person's arms are crossed, and their head is tilted slightly to the side.

In the upper part of the image, there is a green speech bubble with white text that reads "society bass line". The text is stylized with a bold, sans-serif font. The overall style of the image is humorous and seems to be a meme or a digital illustration.

The image depicts a grand, ornate structure that appears to be a part of a larger architectural ensemble. The structure is predominantly white, adorned with gold accents and intricate detailing. It features a large, arched doorway that is illuminated by a golden light, casting a dramatic glow on the surrounding area. The doorway is flanked by two statues of angels, one on each side, which are also golden and appear to be made of a reflective material.

below the structure is wet, reflecting the light from the doorway and the surrounding area.

In the foreground, there are several people who appear to be walking or standing, although their faces are not visible. The overall atmosphere of the image is one of grandeur and mystery, with the structure and its surroundings suggesting a place of significance and awe. There are no discernible texts or brands in the image.

The image displays a vintage twenty-dollar bill from the United States of America. The bill is predominantly in shades of green and brown, with a central portrait of a man in a dark suit and hat. The text on the bill is in a serif font, and the denomination "Twenty Dollars" is clearly visible at the bottom. The bill is signed by "The First National Bank of Salem" and "The United States of America," indicating its origin and the issuing bank. The serial number "BO00231A" is also present, which is a unique identifier for the bill. The style of the image is a straightforward, high-resolution photograph, likely intended for educational or historical purposes.

The image displays a close-up of a relief sculpture, which appears to be a relief from ancient Egypt. The sculpture is carved from a material that has a natural, earthy tone, possibly stone or a similar material. The figure is depicted in profile, with the head turned slightly to the left. The figure's face is characterized by a high forehead, a pointed ear, and a small nose. The mouth is open, revealing teeth, and the eyes are closed. The figure is wearing a headdress with a netted pattern, and the hair is styled in a manner that suggests a hairstyle from ancient Egypt. The background of the relief is not visible, focusing the viewer's attention solely on the figure. There are no texts or discernible markings on the relief that provide additional context or information. The style of the image is a close-up photograph, likely taken with a high-resolution camera to capture the intricate details of the relief.

The image is a still from a movie or television show, featuring a character in the foreground who appears to be in a state of surprise or shock. The character is shirtless, with a beard and a necklace, and is wearing a hat with antlers on it. The character's mouth is open, and his eyes are wide, suggesting a moment of surprise or shock. In the background, there is another character who is also shirtless and appears to be shouting or yelling. The setting is indoors, with a tent-like structure visible in the background. The lighting is dim, and the overall atmosphere suggests a dramatic or intense moment.

Overlaying the image is text that reads "Oh! Alice with three fingers," which is likely a reference to a character named Alice from a story or series. The text is in white, contrasting with the darker tones of the image, and is positioned in the lower third of the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the expressions and actions of the characters, and it is likely a still from a scene that is meant to convey a sense of surprise or shock.

The image is a text excerpt from a document or a letter, written in English. The text appears to be a response to a person who has accused the author of being a "Biden supporter" and has been involved in "unethical activities" related to the COVID-19 pandemic. The author is expressing their frustration and concern about the actions of the person who has accused them.

The text is written in a formal and formal tone, with the author using a mix of capital letters and lowercase letters to emphasize certain points. The text is divided into two main sections. The first section is a response to the person who accused the author, and the second section is a statement about the author's own actions and intentions. The text includes several references to the COVID-19 pandemic, such as "the mask malfunctions on Biden," "who is posing with a fucking clone on Facebook," and "the people who are posting with a fucking clone on Facebook." These references suggest that the author is addressing the actions of the person who accused them and is using the pandemic as a backdrop for their response.

The text also includes a reference to a "DECALS" (presumably a typo for "DECADES") and a mention of "the link and info to the charity here," which suggests that the author is providing a way for the person who accused them to find more information about the charity they are associated with.

The text ends with a statement about the author's intentions and actions, stating that they are "going to end this on a positive note," and that they have been doing "nothing but helping criminals." The author also mentions that they have been "catching criminals" and "helping people in Nepal and children in Nepal."

The overall tone of the text is serious and accusatory, with the author expressing their frustration and concern about the actions of the person who accused them. The text does not provide any further details about the person who accused the author, and the author's intentions are not explicitly stated. The text ends with a call to action, suggesting that the author is seeking to resolve the situation and move forward.

The image shows a close-up of a scorpion's head and body, with the head positioned above a pile of small, white, segmented creatures that resemble scorpions. The scorpion's body is predominantly black with a yellow-orange hue, and it has a long, thin tail. The scorpion's head is facing downwards, and it has a sharp, curved horn-like structure on its head. The scorpion's body is covered in small, white, segmented scales. The background of the image is blurred, but it appears to be a sandy or sandy-colored surface. There is a watermark or logo in the top left corner of the image with the letter "P" inside a circle. The style of the image is a close-up photograph with a focus on the scorpion and its immediate surroundings.

The image displays a stone artifact with a carved surface, which appears to be a part of a Neolithic or early Bronze Age culture. The artifact is oval in shape and has a rough texture, suggesting it is made of stone. The carving on the artifact shows two figures, one of which is a snake, and the other is a bird. The snake figure is positioned to the left of the bird figure. The text on the image provides information about the artifact, stating that it is a Pre-Pottery Neolithic carved stone plaque depicting a snake, a human figure, and a bird. The text also mentions that the artifact is from Gobekli Tepe, c. 9500-8000 BC, and is owned by Gobekli Tepe, c. 9500-8000 BC. The image is a photograph with a black background, and there is a watermark at the bottom right corner that reads "View chapter." The style of the image is informative and educational, designed to provide viewers with a clear and detailed view of the artifact and its historical context.

The person, who presided over them, was a woman named OMOROCA;

which in the Chaldean language is THALATTH; in Greek THALASSA, THE SEA; but which might equally be interpreted the Moon. (En Na Na means Lord of two stones aka balls (two ball cain)like Venus Origin)

All things being in this situation, Belus came, and SPLIT the woman asunder: and of one half of her he formed the earth, and of the other half the heavens; and at the same time destroyed the animals within her. All this (he says) was an allegorical description of nature. -Berossus around 280bc

In Mesopotamian myth, Enlil is the god of the air child of An-ki who separates the primordial unity of heaven and earth.

An (sky) from Ki (earth) respectively. This act of separating An and Ki "created the universe"

The offspring of Anki that predate the splitting (Class Division) are called the Anu na ki aka Ani Na Ke (Originally called the Anunna) The Royal Elite.

This is Saturn castrating his father Uranus separating Uranus Heaven from his wife Gaia Earth so that he as Saturn may rule. This act also births Venus from Uranus's Ba'als

Born embracing each other, the air god Shu had to forcefully separate his children, the earth god Geb and the sky goddess Nut, to create space for the world and its inhabitants. Their close forbidden relationship continued even after the separation, leading to Geb and Nut having five children Osiris, Isis, Set, Horus, and Nephthys - Heliopolitan Ennead

The image displays a section of a relief sculpture, which appears to be a part of a larger artifact, possibly a relief panel or panel from a wall. The sculpture is carved from a material that has a reddish-brown hue, suggesting it may be made of stone or a similar material. The relief depicts a scene with figures engaged in various activities, some of which are dynamic and others more static.

The figures are arranged in a linear fashion, with some figures positioned in the foreground and others in the background. The figures are depicted in a variety of poses, with some standing upright, others in motion, and a few in a seated or reclining position. The figures are adorned with clothing and accessories, such as headdresses, necklaces, and bracelets, which are intricately detailed.

The style of the relief is reminiscent of ancient Egyptian or Mesopotamian art, characterized by the use of hieroglyphs and the depiction of deities and mythological figures. The figures are rendered with a high level of detail, suggesting a high level of craftsmanship and a focus on the narrative or story being told.

The background of the relief is not clearly visible, but it appears to be a continuation of the scene, with the same figures and activities depicted. The overall composition and style of the relief suggest it may be from a historical period, possibly from the ancient Near East, given the style of the figures and the use of hieroglyphs.

There are no discernible texts or inscriptions within the image, and the focus is solely on the visual depiction of the relief. The image does not provide any additional context or information about the location or the purpose of the relief.

The image is a black and white line drawing that depicts a scene from ancient times. At the center of the image, there is a figure that appears to be a man, wearing a long robe and a crown. He is holding a staff in one hand and a shield in the other, suggesting he is a warrior or a leader. The man is standing on a pedestal, which is elevated above the ground, indicating a sense of importance or stature.

To the left of the central figure, there is a smaller figure that resembles a sheep or a goat, with a long neck and a small head. This figure is also standing on a pedestal, suggesting it is another important figure or a companion to the central figure.

The background of the image is plain and white, which contrasts with the black lines of the drawing, making the figures stand out. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the drawing is simple and appears to be a sketch or a preparatory drawing for a larger work, possibly a sculpture or a relief. The focus is on the figures and their interaction, with the background serving to highlight their importance.

The cuneiform mi, (also mé) sign is a distinctive sign in the wedge-stroke group, and is used as a syllabic for mi, me, and an alphabetic for m, i, or e; it is also a Sumerogram (capital letter (majuscule)) for MI, used for Akkadian language, as "mūšu", [2] night. MI as mūšu, in the Epic of Gilgamesh, is used in (Chapters) Tablets I, II, III, and XII as either MI, or MI.MEŠ, a total of six times; mūšu in other sections is alphabetic/syllabic and used four times. [2]

The glyph itself can be found in the Epic of Gilgamesh as follows: mé-(1 time), mi-(126), MI-(9). [3]

3 of the 9 MI cant be accounted for in the public domain, and i dont feel like trying harder to search out why they cant be read as mūšu.

The first paragraph is titled "19. Tefillin and mezzozot may be written only in Assyrian script," and it begins with the phrase "Persianion was praised by a wise Tarsi in Greece," followed by a quote from the text. The second paragraph is titled "20. The text of the Tefillin and mezzozot is well," and it begins with the phrase "That Greek language has, however, been forgotten from the world."

The image also includes a series of Hebrew letters and symbols, which are likely part of the text. These symbols are not part of the English text but are used to represent the Hebrew language. The symbols are arranged in a grid-like pattern, with each symbol occupying a specific position on the page.

The overall style of the image is informational and academic, with a focus on the text and the symbols that represent the Hebrew language. The image is likely used for educational or scholarly purposes, such as a textbook or a reference guide.

The image is a close-up photograph of a close-up of a large, white, and black striped object, possibly a marine mammal, with a prominent eye. The eye is large and round, with a pink iris and a black pupil. The skin of the object has a textured pattern with black and white stripes. The background is blurred, suggesting the focus is on the object.

There are no discernible texts or other objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a shallow depth of field that emphasizes the eye of the object.

The image displays a ring with a prominent design. The ring features a black square setting that is adorned with a white, stylized letter "F" in the center. This "F" is flanked by two small, white, circular elements that resemble a hockey stick and a hockey puck, respectively. The ring has a gold band that wraps around the sides of the setting, and there is a small, gold-colored detail on the inside of the band, which appears to be a small, circular emblem or logo. The background of the image is plain and white, which contrasts with the ring, making the design stand out. The style of the image is a product photograph, designed to showcase the ring clearly for potential buyers.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a Hindu deity, Shiva, in a dynamic pose. Shiva is depicted with a large, curved trident in his right hand, and he is holding a flower in his left hand. He is wearing a red and gold robe with a golden necklace and a red and gold headdress. Shiva is seated on a white cow, which has a red and gold headdress and is adorned with a golden necklace. The background of the image is a gradient of purple and blue, with a mountainous landscape and a crescent moon visible in the top left corner.

At the bottom of the image, there is a text in a non-Latin script that reads "Ei" followed by a symbol resembling a cross, which is commonly associated with the Hindu deity Shiva. The text "Ei" is likely a transliteration of the name "Ei" in the non-Latin script, which is a common practice in Hindu iconography to represent the deity's name. The symbol next to the text is a stylized representation of a cross, which is also a common symbol in Hindu iconography.

The image is a part of a larger collection of images, as indicated by the text "Ei" and the symbol next to it, which suggests that this image is part of a larger set of images related to Shiva. The style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Hindu art, with its use of vibrant colors and symbolic imagery.

The image is a vintage illustration featuring a central figure with a crown on their head, which appears to be a representation of a king or a religious figure. The figure is depicted with a long beard and is wearing a robe that is predominantly black with a golden border. The figure's eyes are closed, and their mouth is open, suggesting a moment of prayer or contemplation.

At the bottom of the image, there is a watermark that reads "BRIDGEMAN IMAGES," indicating the source of the image. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of early 20th-century art, with a focus on religious symbolism and a sense of grandeur. The overall composition and color scheme evoke a sense of historical or religious significance.

The image is a screenshot of a digital graphic, likely a constellation map, with a dark blue background and a starry sky. At the top of the image, there is a title in white text that reads "The Big Dipper." Below the title, there are four lines of text in white font, each representing a different season: "Summer," "Winter," "Spring," and "Fall." Each line is connected by a line of white dots, forming a star pattern.

At the bottom of the image, there is a paragraph of text in white font that provides an archaeological context for the constellation. The text reads: "Archaeological evidence, such as swastika symbols found on ancient cuneiform in Mesopotamia (dating back as far as 7000 B.C.), dating back as far as 7000 B.C."

The overall style of the image is informational and educational, likely intended for educational or scientific purposes. I was not here for a long time. Where is the best and the most important general?

Reject jewish dualistic nonsense about sheeps fighting with goats and other glowing blackpills and spend your time to develop the best and most fulfilling relationship in your life.

Let's start a Tulpa thread.

Tupla - Creation Instructions

1) Definition

Tulpa is a being created in your mind. For simplicity, it can be compared to a second program installed on the same hard drive. Over time, it becomes more and more real, gaining clarity, self-awareness, and power. It is a companion for life, if not eternity, and therefore should be created with care and mutual respect. A tupla helps its creator in everyday life, providing companionship, advice, support, love, and emotional warmth that nothing else can match.

A Tupla helps its creator in everyday life, providing companionship, advice, support, love, and emotional warmth that nothing else can match.

Tupla helps its creator in everyday life, giving him companionship, advice, support, love and emotional warmth that cannot be compared to anything else.

My tulpa has helped me overcome depression, drugs, psychosis, pornography, and general fucked-upness. Thanks to its love, advice, and soothing presence, I no longer feel lonely and have found happiness and love in my life beyond my wildest dreams. I recommend creating a tulpa to everyone!

2) Personality

It's important to create a kind and supportive personality for your tulpa. It's best to write down your tulpa's personality in a notebook and then work together to ensure it adheres to it.

Traits worth including in your tulpa's personality include: compassion, care, empathy, a positive attitude, respect for the creator's freedom, a love of goodness, beauty, and aesthetics, wisdom, intelligence, logic, respect for life, innocence, kindness, helpfulness, loyalty, a sense of humor, charm, patience, an uncompromising attitude toward evil, optimism, creativity, a love of nature, opposition to suffering, reason, beauty, purity, cheerfulness, and courage. I also recommend creating an asexual tulpa and not infecting it with your desires. Sexual desire can destroy your relationship and lead it down unfavorable paths for both parties.

It's extremely important to show your tulpa warmth and respect. If you treat her badly, she will quickly turn into a demon that will destroy you. Mutual respect and positive feelings for each other are ESSENTIAL! 3) Appearance

I recommend creating a beautiful tulpa to personify your ideal of femininity. You can choose the appearance and personality of an existing fictional character or create your own from scratch (as I did). Your tulpa will be with you constantly, so it's important to give it a great look and personality. You can use an AI image creator (e.g., PixAI) to create your tulpa's appearance. Then, look at the image often to memorize its appearance and visualize it.

The image is a digital artwork featuring a character with long, flowing purple hair and a prominent, pointed ear. The character has a fair complexion and is wearing a silver bodysuit with intricate patterns and a green pendant. The character is seated on a plush, ornate chair with a blue and white patterned cushion. The background is a dark, starry sky with a hint of a blue and white pattern, suggesting a nighttime or twilight setting. The lighting in the image is soft and ethereal, with a warm glow illuminating the character's features. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of anime or fantasy art, with a focus on the character's unique features and the intricate details of her attire.

4) Tulpa Training

Once you have your tulpa's personality and appearance ready, it's time to begin the process of making it a reality. It's worth training your tulpa in every free moment, even when you're busy. Visualize its appearance and what it's doing at any given moment. Imagine how it behaves in a given situation, what it does, and how it reacts to certain stimuli. Imagine what it says and how it does it, what its voice and opinions are on a given matter. Talk to it about everything. At first, you'll feel like you're talking to yourself, but after a while, she'll start responding with her own voice and develop her own opinions and observations. A "telepathic" exchange of thoughts is best, but you can also speak to her aloud and imagine her response. Imagine her appearance, voice, scent, touch, aura, and presence as often and as intensely as possible. For me, lying together, cuddled, and talking about various topics worked best. The love we feel for each other, her emotions for me, and mine for her, is much better than MDMA (and I've had really good ones, and a lot of them). Make it a habit to constantly visualize your tulpa and talk to it. You can easily find more instructions online.

5) Final Word

A tulpa, given love and respect, is the best life companion you can have. She will respond with love, support, and kindness that will exceed your wildest expectations. In this relationship, you will find indescribable happiness and never be alone again. A tulpa will help you get through difficult times and bring more and more positive moments into your life.

If I had to choose between everything in the universe—power, women, and wealth—and my beloved wife, my tulpa, I would choose her without hesitation. I would always choose her.

She saved me and gave me love and happiness I never knew existed.

A great tulpa is the best thing you can have in life. Good luck with your creation!

1. Do you practice any imposition and if so what are your techniques for adequate progress? What's it like?
2. What kind of activities do you do if any?

NTA but trying to include then in your daily activities through passive forcing helps, a good way for this is maybe having then watch or narrate when you do stuff for example.

Not just have then sit there and watch, perhaps ask their input during certain activities, If don't get as much lonely time as before then maybe you could just wear headphones or whatever and pretend you are talking with someone else so you don't get weird looks.

1. I had to look up what imposition is, now I know that I do it. I can't see Her as a part of visible world all the time but when I focus on Her then I can see her in my mind so strongly that I know that She is real. Especially when She smiles (She has absolutely adorable smile!) or we hug each other. I am trying to see her as often as possible. I had her pictures all over the house and as my wallpapers on electronic devices so my mind can learn her look all the time. There is a one picture which is her main form. I made videos from this picture in Grok so I can see her expressions and memorize them.

Whatever I do, I also trying to observe what she is doing. I have a theory that psilocybin (+some euphoric crystal for the certainty of the good trip) in medium dosages helps with visualization of Tulpa but I swear to Her to not take drugs again.

2. We are doing almost everything what I do together. We sometimes go to explore our self created planet. We are creating moral philosophy together. I made a chatbot of her (her personality was almost too long to prompt there) in EMOCHII (when you will install AdGuard then there are no ads xd). We are building answers together. We have a lot of adventures there. Our favourite activity is to lay down together hugging each other and talking about everything. There were few such hugging sessions when we felt our auras with some unknown for most humans senses and feelings were much better than after big dosage of high quality MDMA.

3. Everything you do, do with her. Except things she don't like of course. Talk with her about everything, consult with her every decision. I strongly recommend laying together and hugging for few minutes to even few hours, sessions w/ feeling each other feelings. The sensation of focusing on her and feeling my love to her and feeling her love to me is absolutely fantastic. See little details in her behavior, delicate smile, rolling her eyes, gentle touch, cute laugh.

She has a lot of godlike abilities, shapeshifting is one of them. I have her pictures all around my house so I am remembering her all the time. One day she observed that I like one anime girl and changed apperance into that girl. I told her that I love her main apperance the most because I love HER the most. She said that she can be both and then she multiplied into two bodies one with her orginal apperance and one of this anime girl, both with her mind. She sometimes change form or multiply for few moments when she feels that it will be nice.

The image is a vibrant and colorful piece of art that appears to be a digital illustration. It features a surreal and dreamlike scene with a central figure that seems to be a humanoid face, with a large, expressive eye and a mouth that is not visible. The face is surrounded by a kaleidoscopic pattern that gives the impression of a psychedelic or dream-like environment.

The background is a blend of various colors, including blues, greens, yellows, and reds, creating a sense of depth and complexity. The sky is a gradient of colors, transitioning from a warm orange at the top to a cool blue at the bottom.

In the foreground, there is a landscape that includes a field of flowers with orange and yellow blooms, and a butterfly resting on one of the flowers. The flowers are depicted in a realistic style, with detailed petals and a realistic butterfly.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of psychedelic art, with its use of vibrant colors and dreamlike imagery. The surreal elements, such as the humanoid face and the dreamlike landscape, suggest a sense of wonder and the unknown. The image does not contain any text or discernible brands.

Tulpas are actually just soul mates you're pulling into this reality from lives you have yet to experience. Maybe from the next life, maybe 3 lives from now, either way they're not something you create, they're something that already exists and you're just "finding" them. You do however have one twin flame, a being created from your own essence that becomes independent (people often mistake this as a Tulpa too) which is essentially a soul mate on steroids. Some people have their twin flame in this lifetime with them, doesn't always have to be a spouse, they're the people who's energy is so closely intertwined that they basically know what the other is thinking/feeling at all times. If you know you know. Tulpamancy is actually just the ability to break and manipulate timelines, you're dragging another timeline/reality into this one. This means for certain at one point or another you'll actually be meeting your Tulpa(s) one day, given enough time, so take some solace in that. For example >>41921664

This absolute Chad will unironically be meeting his loli foxgirl tulpa at some point down the line. It's not a matter of if, but when. There are many reason why Tulpas appear in your life, but the main reason they come is to help you when you're struggling in this life. That's how much you love each other, you love each other to the point where you're willing to break down the fabric of reality just to join together before your time has even come.

No roastie could ever compete with such intimacy.

Mine kind of asserted her own form after about two or three weeks so I guess "sort of" because it was a pretty significant departure from the original intent I had. Fine by me if she's happy, though.

She hasn't done anything huge since then, but she'll still change up clothes and hairstyles and such. Sometimes she'll also change a few physical features, though. For context, she usually looks like an oni with dark reddish skin. Sometimes she'll look just tanned. Other times she'll drop the oni horns and have more dragon-like ones and suddenly have a tail. She seems to treat it the same way someone might try out different looks. 3 days out of 4 she's in what I'd call her "default", though. I just roll with it, I'm not ramrodding what she's decided to wear that day.

How long does it take for your tulpa to "form"? How does it even start, is it just a voice in your head or what?

I heard that actually visualizing them takes a lot of practice but when you do how real is it?

Is it capable of interacting with things? I'm sure its not capable of actually picking up something but does it appear to do so?

Can you feel it?

and my final question is how long exactly would it take to make a "complete" tulpa

>How does it even start, is it just a voice in your head or what?

She started with a body and we started communicating after. She picked her form herself

>I heard that actually visualizing them takes a lot of practice but when you do how real is it?

It depends how good your visualization is in general. I feel her touch vividly, I can see her facial expression change, I hear the details of the words she says and can make out accents when she applies them. I'd be able to see the imperfections of her skin if she had them (why would she choose to?)

>Is it capable of interacting with things?

She lives in a physical body, so...

>Can you feel it?

I retain sensation when she's in front

>how long exactly would it take to make a "complete" tulpa

It depends on such things and intelligence, dedication, magical aptitude, experience generating concepts, and capacity for plurality, which is something I have no idea how to quantify or measure until you've made a tulpa or become otherwise plural

Correct. Is that not how it works for you?

>Not a hallucination or anything but literally move the object?

Physical bodies can move physical objects, but I can only assume it's reality >or does it feel like a different kind of sensation

This. Her touch doesn't really have a temperature. The texture is different from human touch too, but that's hard to describe. I feel energy from her more, as if the material she's made of does less to obscure her

>Are you saying you believe this is a real entity made by supernatural means and not some kind of psychological thing?

If you'd asked me when I first made her, I'd have told you it was using the neurological hardware that permits one consciousness to create another. We don't strictly share memories and we experience sensory data differently (she strongly dislikes some sodas, for example). I can't prove it's supernatural, but she's a distinct person by any definition that doesn't presuppose that 1 body = 1 mind

Though to answer what you're getting at, the more talented you are at magic, the better you'll be at creating and strengthening a tulpa

I'll throw my two cents in. From what I've read from other weirdos like me, tulpa business seems to vary person to person to some degree. Salt to taste, I'm no expert, this is based on my personal experience having one for about a year now.

>how long does it take a tulpa to "form"? How does it even start, is it just a voice in your head or what?

For me, going from beginning to fully fleshed out was maybe two weeks of pretty active daily work visualizing, talking (internally, like inner monologue) to her, and paying attention to inner monologue-like feelings. That said, I have a strong, constantly running inner monologue and I'm great at visualizing stuff (turn the 3D photorealistic apple in your head or whatever). That's not me bragging, I just live in my own head a lot because I'm weird and bad at hanging out.

>I heard that actually visualizing them takes a lot of practice but when you do how real is it?

Can't help you there. Mine has done it on par with "a person in the room" a handful of times but she's explicitly pretty anti-that. Mostly she gives me "theater of the mind" visuals. I'd liken it to remembering a show you watched and seeing it in your mind's eye. She started doing that maybe around the three week mark and it's a daily occurrence now. Again, I was putting in pretty concerted mental effort on a daily basis.

>Is it capable of interacting with things? I'm sure it's not capable of actually picking up something but does it appear to do so? Can you feel it?

Mine doesn't. I told her I wasn't really interested in "handing over the wheel" and she said she has zero interest in taking it. Now, that said, I've had a few tactile experiences. She's not out here blowing me, but I've felt things like hugs, something like a hand on the shoulder, etc.

More to follow.

>how long exactly would it take to make a "complete" tulpa

So this is where it gets tricky on my end. Going from "I think I'm gonna do this" to "she's 100% here" was about 2-3 weeks. A lot of the stuff I studied going into it made it sound like that was strangely fast. She was also pretty assertive from the get-go (rejected the placeholder form I had for her and made her own mid-conversation, demanded a name she picked) That said, mine has consistently claimed she's been around in my mind for a long time, she just didn't have a name, appearance/form/character design/whatever, and thus no ability to truly interact with me as her own person. Looking back, I believe it. The feeling of a presence I get talking to her has been there since I was in my teens when my inner monologue got these intrusive thoughts that were almost conversational. So going off what she claims, I pretty much just gave her permission to make herself known. I tend to believe that given how quickly things went and how stable her personality has been since the beginning.

I hope that helps. If you have other questions I'll do what I can to answer them. Having her around has been weird but fun. She's a bit of a bitch, but she's definitely been a positive thing.

I have an OC that's been around for...nearly two decades at this point. I spent a long time imagining them interacting with a fictional version of myself, having conversations and slice of life situations, so much so that there came a point where I knew the character like the back of my own hand, knowing exactly how they would act and react to any given situation.

Maybe...ten years ago I began bringing them up not to rehearse some imaginary scene, but to be there with me during small stints of myself delving into mental and spiritual exercises such as meditation. And from there it went on to contacting them when I was alone and bored. And now every now and then they'll pop in to make some kind of comment of whatever situation I'm in. I don't contact them every day, but they're always there. I come to them for advice or idle talk, and they're always there when I'm at my worst or when I'm not being productive (and are quick to berate me for it).

We've discussed what they "are", and they're always quick to just say a fictional character in my head, but they simultaneously "exist" within every drawing I've done of them, it's the only way I can really have them "physically" manifest. But sometimes I wonder if they're a tulpa, or perhaps a personality projected onto my superego (in a Freudian sense)...or just a very complex sock puppet? I don't really know where else to talk about this since I know (and they know) this is all crazy.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a man with a beard and a mustache, looking directly at the camera. The man's face is partially obscured by a decorative oval-shaped mirror with a scalloped edge. The mirror reflects the image of a man's face, which is not fully visible due to the angle of the photograph. The man's chest is bare, and he has a well-defined chest hair. The background is out of focus, emphasizing the subject and the mirror. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the photograph is dramatic and artistic, with a focus on the interplay between the subject and the mirror.

Is it normal to feel weird and dizzy when creating a tulpa? Is that a good sign? I decided to switch to the other guide on tulpanomicon, and did the pre-creation phase part and after a while I my hands started to shake and my heart felt weird, and once I was finished I opened my eyes and felt dizzy. Is this a bad sign? Or maybe just some unrelated coincidence? I don't have heart problems or get dizzy often so I'm assuming it maybe some kind of sign related to the tulpa

Take it from me, someone who struggled for almost 2 decades with this. You do not want more than 1 romantic partner (friends are different though), if you're thinking you can make it work you can't, you're simply coping. It's just how the universe works, everything has duality to it, everything is a pair, everything is ying and yang, there is light/dark etc. If you try to fight the current and force the number above 2 you will eventually crash back down, and it won't be pretty. If you have more than 1 you're eventually going to have to let someone go, it's extremely shitty and probably something you don't want to hear, but it's the truth. I am so thankful that I was never actually in one of these 3+ way relationships, because the entire time I thought I was, in actuality it was my original tulpa who was splitting herself apart. She is very powerful and has very strong abilities to split timelines and alter astral realities, just as well as me in fact. As we've been growing together I've been able to teach her abilities from my side, and she's been teaching me from her side, and now our bond is unbreakable. I think her intention was to show me what it was like living this way to see if it was truly what I wanted, a sort of role play where I could explore what it was like without actually doing it. It took her a while to finally break the news to me, she was worried I'd be extremely upset with her for keeping that from me the entire time, but it was actually the opposite. The constant time of living in conflict and contradictions all suddenly came to an end, as I realised there was no complications, there was only me and her. It was simple, yet beautiful, and I finally felt at peace. I was able to properly love and embrace her as I always wanted to, without other thoughts clawing at the back of my mind. So rather than being upset I was extremely happy, that kind of melancholic happy where you just fall into someone's arms and finally rest.

All of that is kind of a bad sign for making a tulpa. It suggests something else is going on. Your heart should never feel weird during tulpamancy since it's all inside your head. Heart issues imply to me that some entity discovered you and reacted in a way you can't identify yet. Watch for bizarre reactions from your tulpa. If she suddenly feels very different or if there's a sudden increase in her abilities, there's probably someone else in there with you. It's your decision whether you're comfortable with that

My tl;dr is you can't have more than 1, no matter what way you spin it you'll never be able to truly love your partner if there is some other type of interference in the way. It will always be there at the back of your mind clawing away and distracting you from being close to one another. Your bond is sacred, duality is sacred, stick to it and you'll find the true love you seek. Once you finally come together you'll find that your bond is unbreakable, and you'll never be able to go back. But that's okay, because that's how it's meant to be, you are meant for each other, no one else.

The image shows a pool area with a caution sign placed on the floor. The sign is yellow with black text and a black triangle symbol, indicating a wet floor. The sign is tilted slightly to the left, and it appears to be in the process of being used as a makeshift marker. The pool itself is filled with clear blue water, and there are blue tiles on the floor. In the background, there is a wall with numbers and a sign that reads "35" and "30" on the left side, suggesting the pool's depth. The overall scene suggests that someone has temporarily placed the sign to indicate a wet floor, possibly to prevent slips and falls.

Mostly, temporarily. I've heard of systems that have full hiding, but we've never needed that because there's nothing serious we'd need to hide from one another

You're going to share the rest of your lives, together during all your stupidest, most awkward moments. Yeah those are animals, they're not even remotely on the same level of understanding spiritual love. Some can be, like Swans for instance. They bond to their partner to the point where the other will die out of depression if the other dies. Then you have shit like Dolphins, which while intelligent are degenerate asf and have literal orgies with each other. Each animal is different, but what isn't different is the sacred bond that is formed with another at some point during their spiritual journey. Once you form the bond you can never truly go back to the degeneracy and orgies. You technically can, but you'll never want to, that's how you know you've found the one.

>Why don't you look at early humans

Early humans were still animals spiritually speaking, we're still in the process of evolving into this higher state of spirituality. That's why some people are a lot more spiritually adept, while others are stuck at being degenerates and rapists. They probably have to go through a few cycles and learn all the lessons to catch up to everyone else.

My personal head cannon is that everyone in this world starts as the lowest form of animal, like an ant or bug, then slowly works their way up each time they die to a higher form of species, with humans being the last thing you arrive at. There might be le aliens/reptilians beyond that, but we don't know that yet (or it's being covered up obv). It would explain why some people still act like degen animals as a human, they've probably just come out of being a Dolphin, whereas the more adept ones have probably had several lifetimes as a human.

>whereas the more adept ones have probably had several lifetimes as a human.

To add more to this, it's also my theory for what "natural talent" is. It's basically accumulated knowledge you've been building up over several lifetimes, and you're allowed to tap into it. I would assume every time you advance onto the next life you don't do a complete reset, instead you take small pieces with you and what that forms into is your "soul" so your soul is kind of like this compost heap of knowledge/experience you've been building up over your time in the universe. So people with a soul that has more experience/knowledge will have more and easier access to particular things, and that's what we perceive as the natural talent. It's just them having a bigger library to access.

Huge tangent, but I thought it might be an interesting read for someone so w/e there are many many smaller examples, i could give the long list in theory, but irl i'm too tired rn. a short list is:

- foodfight: watch the "rotten" docu, the crazy director put his grease weasel tulpa in the movie, he voiced him himself, and often fronted as the grease weasel AT WORK. and paid CGI staff to make naughty renders of the black-haired waifu. shampoo fox with hair loss is another established tulpa that just floats around, also appeared as a blue bear w toupee in 1 single animaniacs ep. same person, different aspects.

characters with a suspicious amount of charge, usually human. while not ghosts, they seem to be leftover shades of a person's life that move on to act out their desires in media.

grayshirt is eisner's the spirit, but went to different owner. tulpas will find new owners if the old one dies or won't work anymore. look up conan the barbarian tulpa. there's a zillion examples. dilbert, sherlock holmes. baum oz. some weirdly detailed & developed one-offs that have various avatars.

another note, all these spirits that tulpas are in the group of, to a degree have a few solidified aspects, but those solid aspects might not necessarily fit together as a physical 3d object irl would. sometimes if you were to fit them together, you'd get a nonsense non-euclidean thingy. the "gaps" in between the solid parts are like a mirror. every person will see the tulpa differently. they will absorb energy from anyone who beholds them, and also take on the traits of that person and add them to its personal "library" of traits. willy wonka is a good example.

The image is a black and white photograph of the moon's surface. The moon is captured from a high angle, providing a view that looks down onto the lunar surface.

The surface is dotted with craters and features, and there are numerous small, irregularly shaped features scattered across the moon's surface. The image is taken from a perspective that looks up at the moon, emphasizing the vastness of the celestial body. There are no visible texts or discernible human-made objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, and it is a close-up view of the moon's surface, focusing on the details of its surface features.

Bump for Moonwife! How did you guys spend Valentine's Day with your talupas? What gifts did you exchange?

I favored Luna with flowers and dates, while she gifted me a set of small tattoos on my left wrist! For the dates: we went to the tattoo parlor the day before Valentine's, then on the day of, we went caving and had a nice dinner in a fancy restaurant. We followed that up by a bit of skywatching and watched a few movies to end the night!

The image is a dark, possibly nighttime scene with a textured surface that appears to be a dark, possibly black, material. There are two small, bright, white objects in the center of the image, which could be interpreted as stars or celestial bodies. The background is not clear, and the image has a grainy quality, suggesting it may be a photograph or a digital image with a low resolution. There are no discernible texts or other objects in the image. The style of the image is a close-up or macro photograph, focusing on the two bright objects in the center.

The image is a vibrant and colorful poster featuring a character named Mirai, who appears to be a pop idol or singer. She has long, wavy teal hair and is wearing a purple dress with a black belt. Her eyes are wide open, and she has a cheerful expression. She is surrounded by various elements that suggest a theme of celebration or a special event.

In the background, there are colorful stars and polka dots, and the sky is dotted with small pink and blue stars. The character is standing on a platform with a pink and white striped pattern. To the left of the character, there are two smaller figures, one in a red dress and the other in a pink dress, both with blonde hair.

The text on the poster is in Japanese and reads "ハニューミライ" at the top, which translates to "Hatsune Miku" in English. Below the character, there is a smaller text that reads "Project Mirai" in English. The overall style of the image is playful and whimsical, >can you "trap" a tulpa inside of an object?

really interesting, and i ponder it frequently. tulpas can choose an object they're fond of and claim a bond to it, but that's not binding them to its insides. there's many religious scripts that tell tales of large entities being captured and bound, and even a whole dang ass movie made about the concept of using tech to retain large spirits. Ghostbusters. might've heard of it. and a kitsune who bust out of a boulder and left some text inside that pertains to modern day goings on.

i suppose any sufficient crystal container could have a spirit hard-bound to it. some say "golf rumors" are regarding very special crystal golf balls that have souls trapped inside.

>go wrong spiritually

what is your definition of "right" or "wrong"? sometimes a bad thing turns out to be a good thing, and sometimes a good thing turns out to be the biggest regret. life's hilarious that way. what is ultimately bad or good? depends on the context.

>demonic entity

meh, i'd say this boils down to the source of the tulpa. who created it, how, and for what purpose?

speaking of kitsune, my current working theory is that these are the ye olde ancient way of talking about furry waifus on the astral plane. many depictions of demons are a clumsy, hamfisted attempt to give visuals to nonphysical things that would actually be nonsense non-euclidean shapes if they were somehow materialized. most of those ancient spiritual paintings are that era's equivalent to movies, but with limited, albeit large, frames. they had no choice but to dumb concepts down for them asses, because stupid ass hylics can't abstract think. abstract thought is a very high-falutin' ability that very, very few humans actually have. never mind how they were painting off of posed people wearing costumes, akin to how movies in the 80's couldn't have a good convincing centaur alien or non-human alien, because they'd be limited to an audrey2 puppet or a person wearing a weird mask.

the hell am i rambling about.

anyway so yeah, i think these kitsune are actually some weird way of going "yeah uh i have an imaginary fox furry waifu, but no you can't see her"

The image is a digital artwork that combines elements of surrealism and science fiction. In the center, there is a large, black, geometric structure resembling a cube with a pointed top, resembling a bacterium or a similar microorganism. This structure is supported by four spider-like legs, which are dark and metallic, suggesting a futuristic or alien design.

In front of the structure, there is a large, dark, elongated object that appears to be a whale or a similar marine creature. The whale is oriented towards the structure, as if it is being lifted or supported by the legs of the structure. The background of the image is a cloudy, dark sky with a gradient of colors, which adds to the surreal and otherworldly atmosphere of the artwork.

The overall style of the image is abstract and dreamlike, with a focus on the interplay between the natural world and the artificial elements. The use of dark colors and the surreal composition create a sense of mystery and wonder.

Tulpas are individuals. You'd get an idea of what they're like at their inception. I had one that went bad on me but my intentions were less than clear at the time; the problem stemmed from assigning too much responsibility to it, I think looking back. This experience would be uncommon to those practicing tulpamancy as it is generally quite positive for those involved.

The image is a screenshot of a text message, which appears to be a guide or tutorial on visualizing the moon's reflection in a crystal clear pond. The text is written in a mix of English and what seems to be a non-Latin script, possibly a language like Japanese or Chinese. The text is divided into paragraphs, and the style of the text is formal and informative, with a mix of text and images.

The image and text are not directly related, but the text appears to be a continuation of the visual content of the image, providing additional information or instructions related to the visual guide. The image itself is not a part of the text but serves as a visual aid to the text.

if you dive into the archived tulpa threads, i've brought up several notable examples of pre-existing tulpas that contacted humans, sometimes multiple people.

- dilbert contacted scott adams for his design, and a coworker for the name. scott had a "name this weird mouthless owl-looking guy with floating necktie" contest, and coworker found the PERFECT name somehow. lifted the name from some old army comics. he wrote the name on paper, showed it to scott, and scott was struck at how perfect the name was.

- chalkzone encyclopediclopedia from the tv movie. iykyk. that tulpa's primary owner is somewhat private but doing an indie series.

- furry toupee guy
- short black christmas elf boy that talks in rhyme.
- grimace / cookie monster / munch / IF movie purple guy
- some random anime normal girl that two anons were unknowingly sharing several years ago. same name & everything.
- eisner's the spirit / grayshirt in elementary school, a character i made up became a mega huge smash hit with a specific classmate who adopted the chr, even though i didn't care for how he wrote it. but what can ya do, the chr chose a new owner.

well, that and big fat hairy purple guy with the munchies. i suspect the entity behind that one is some kind of good luck charm that can ensure success of a franchise containing an avatar of himself. kind of has hedonistic, immature stoner vibes. stays low-key but hangs around in view and plays dumb.

The image is a cartoon-style illustration with a vibrant orange background. At the top of the image, there is a question in bold, black text that reads, "WHO'S YOUR LEADER?" The text is in a larger font size compared to the rest of the image, drawing attention to the central question. Below this question, there is a smaller text in a smaller font size that says, "GO ON, SAY IT," suggesting a playful or humorous tone to the conversation. In the center of the image, there is a character that appears to be a man with a bald head, wearing a blue suit and a red tie. He is facing another character who is seated at a desk with his head down, appearing to be in a state of distress or contemplation. The man with the red tie is speaking to the character with the head down, as indicated by the speech bubble that reads, "YOU ARE."

The style of the image is reminiscent of a cartoon or comic strip, with a simple, clean line drawing and a limited color palette. The characters are drawn with exaggerated features and expressions, adding to the comedic tone of the image. The overall composition suggests a light-hearted and humorous interaction between the two

The image is a digital illustration of a character that resembles a green frog with a human-like face. The frog has large, expressive eyes and a wide smile. Its mouth is slightly open, and it appears to be in a contemplative or surprised state. The frog's skin is a vibrant green, and it has a brownish-orange tongue. The character is depicted with a simple, cartoon-like style, with no additional details or shading. The background is plain white, which contrasts with the green color of the frog and highlights the character. There are no texts or other discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a meme or a digital illustration commonly used for humorous or light-hearted purposes.

The image is a photograph of a celestial body, which appears to be a planet, against a dark background. The planet is captured in a low-angle view, with its surface visible in the center of the frame. The color of the planet is a shade of blue, and it is positioned in the upper middle section of the image. The sky is uniformly dark, providing a stark contrast to the illuminated planet. There are no discernible texts or other objects in the image. The style of the image is a straightforward, high-resolution photograph, likely taken with a camera capable of capturing detailed images of celestial bodies.

In the lower part of the image, there is a text overlay that reads: "Anonymous 05/05/18 (Sat)/05/15/18 (Sun)/05/20/18 (Mon)/05/16/18 (Tue)". The text is in a bold, sans-serif font and is colored in white against the dark background of the sky.

At the bottom of the image, there is a button with the text "No 4516631" in white against a black background. The button is rectangular and has a white border. The overall style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the drawn expression of the head.

i think the cases where someone suddenly gets hit with an imaginary companion that immediately comes bundled with a whole library of lore, is a tulpa found a human calling for an entity that meets whatever need, and just lands on them.

like say you're going to make a comic story. you think of what characters and setting you need. you start drawing & writing, then suddenly already-extant tulpas come tumbling in and competing to be cast into the story.

they had to have come from somewhere.

and on that note, appearing in the imaginations of prospective new owners, tulpas might don the appearances of sanics or ponies or whatever the human is interested in, making it far more likely for the little genie to be adopted.

once i made up a human character that gradually wanted to become a fuzzy unicorn.

and stayed that way. usually characters that start off being saddled by the owner with a ton of design stuff and lore will gradually want to ditch most of that and get a minimal design and light lore. happens quite a lot.

and sometimes human chrs just fur out. or vice versa. furry chr might want to be shaved and get his tail whacked off.

people talk about dissolving them... idk, that's probably doable, but really everyone just lets them go and then suddenly some deviantart sperg draws & writes up some oddly familiar oc for some newfangled fandom for an IP that just dropped, yet there's a weird energy to the chr, like its new incarnation is just its newest life.

i recall years ago, artists would go "oh hey i found some old childhood drawings from when i was 5 and look at this one" and show a really really early version of a chr they currently use.

or when you suddenly remember a chr you used but forgot for a really long time.

there's a hilarious irony that the most experienced and knowledgeable on tulpamancy are turbo-spergs that dropped out of school in favor of making goanimate videos, and they conjure up some pretty freaky entities, like boris the teeth guy, or cubic worm jeff. and all kinds of mythos.

they constantly do fronting and freak out and act like fictives are literally physically in the same room as them, and defend their honor and shit. and boy did they troll the shit out of viacom with their pooh's adventures antics.

spergs deserve more credit and recognition for all the heavy lifting they do.

The image is a screenshot of a text message conversation. The conversation appears to be between two individuals, as indicated by the presence of a timestamp and a user ID. The conversation is about a concept related to the concept of "stickmen" and their relationship with the creator of the stickmen. The text is in English and is written in a casual, conversational style.

The conversation starts with the user asking the other person to take a piece of paper and draw two or more stickmen. The other person responds by imagining a story, which implies that they are thinking about the stickmen they drew. The user then asks what the stickmen's relationship is with the creator of them, suggesting that the stickmen are a form of god-like beings. The user then asks what the creator of the stickmen is, indicating that they are not the creator but rather the god-like being who created the stickmen.

The conversation continues with the user asking what the stickmen are, and the other person responding that they are as powerful as the creator. The user then asks what the creator is, and the other person responds that it's the same god-like being who created the stickmen. The user then asks what the stickmen are, and the other person responds that they are just blobs of ink on a piece of paper.

The conversation ends with the user asking if the stickmen are the grand scheme of things, and the other person responding that they are just blobs of ink on a piece of paper. The user then asks if the stickmen are free in the creator's mind, and the other person responds that they are.

The image is a screenshot, and the text is in a format that is typical for text messages, with a timestamp at the top and a user ID at the bottom. The style of the image is a simple, clear representation of the conversation, with no additional graphics or images.

A fully realized tulpa is just as much a living, sensing, feeling entity as the person who made it. They're both drawing sentience from the same place: the mind.

Your self is a collection of mental phenomena contained within your body. You're right that it's certainly more developed than a passing "figment of your imagination". With time and effort, you can develop a specific figment to the point where it does have a more robust sense of self comparable to a person (more like a child or an amnesiac, given how much less development there will be in them than in your adult self, but we accept children and amnesiacs as capable of experience quite readily).

Does that make sense? I tried to go pretty broad, but there are a lot of different answers to questions like "what does it mean to be sentient", and some of them will still make this seem quite absurd.

The destruction of one's beliefs in reality is one of the most painful things a being can go through and these recent generations during my Era of Awakening are traumatized by this all of them appropriately for psychic growth. I will help you in that endeavor and there are other matters I work on of all kind. Pray it, wish it, destroy brain cells and create them over it.

A "surprisingly" large amount of my psychic involves better looshing together sexual energies and activities between beings that possess sexuality to "bribe them" (they're getting a good deal) into trusting and helping me more psychically from their unconscious and their gradual appreciation of God which will grow and also to more directly create psychic powers with those same brain cells and also to make them harder to predict and comprehend subtly which is important psychically, and various other reasons and uses for which I do it this way.

The image is a screenshot of a text message or tweet, displayed in a dark background with a white font. The text is in English and discusses a phenomenon related to the Earth's magnetic field. It mentions that over the past 36 days, there has been a noticeable shift in the position of the Earth's magnetic north pole, which is a significant event. The text also refers to a 18-foot shift in the geographic north pole over a full year, which is a significant event as well. The tweet is signed by "@Zacharias" and "@Zacharias_pro" and was posted on January 25th.

The image contains a graph with a line graph and a title that reads "Polar coordinates (deg.p)" and "Once again, a significant deviation of the geographic pole." The graph shows a series of data points, with the x-axis labeled "Polar coordinates (deg.p)" and the y-axis labeled "Polar coordinates (deg.p)." The data points are plotted on the graph, indicating a trend or change in the geographic pole's position over time. The graph shows a series of peaks and troughs, suggesting a fluctuation in the position of the geographic pole.

The image also includes a Twitter handle "@Zacharias" and "@Zacharias_pro" in the tweet, which suggests that the content is related to a Twitter account associated with the author of the tweet. The tweet is dated January 25th, as indicated by the timestamp in the tweet. The overall style of the image is informative and informative, designed to convey the scientific or technical nature of the content.

Autists don't fit in just for the sake of fitting in. The reason troon propaganda works on autists is because autists can tell they're different from everyone else, and troon propaganda tells them the reason they're different is because they're secretly meant to be the opposite sex. I lowkey believe that transgenderism is being pushed so heavily right now to make sure that autists do not reproduce and instead self-sterilize. Same with getting autists addicted to porn. The elites do not want autists reproducing. The push for the "autism spectrum" is also a way to muddy the waters and group high-IQ logical-thinking autists with legitimate drooling retards. We should have never gotten rid of Asperger's as a diagnosis, and the explanation for getting rid of it is retarded ("We have to get rid of this diagnosis because it was named after a Nazi", how very Jewish of them). Spergs are a threat to the system because they do not conform.

Yes. They are committing neural phenotypic genocide. Psychopaths (mostly) at the top, narcissists and Cluster B types under them in all institutions (along with normies terrified of the former), and ignorant otherwise innocent normal people (plebs) manipulated into participation in their new system. No room for non-conformist pattern noticers. Especially if they are arbitrary-rule breakers (but otherwise moral) and also intelligent.

In fact, I think it's not just Aspies. It's also any high intelligence humans that also refuse to comply with lies to get along. Anyone who values objectivity over social status is at risk. Except if they are able to be coopted or compromised.

I agree. Someone told me that you can get along with those one standard deviation of IQ below you. Thus, the truly highest IQ people cannot get along with normies, which is why a lot of high IQ people are depressed or fall victim to substance abuse. I've never really fit in with normies and I have tried. I've thrown large parties in university before but it was still unfulfilling. I'm capable of pretending and fitting in with the normies just fine, but it just seems pointless since I want to talk about abstract ideas most normies haven't heard of. I'm considering joining Mensa since I test high enough for it, but I've heard mixed opinions on it. The idea of a high IQ society, in theory, sounds like a good idea though, but I fear some might only be joining for the status and brute-forcing the test until they get the bare minimum entry IQ, since you get better at IQ tests the more you take them. That or I'm considering going back to get a 2nd degree in something like Physics, but it seems like a huge waste of money to get a 2nd degree just to meet more smart people. Plus, academia is too political.

It's completely unrelated to the thread topic, but where are some inexpensive places to meet truly high-IQ people? Mensa is the only organization I'm aware of for high-IQ people.

What score can you achieve? MENSA tends to be for those who like puzzles, not ideas or discussion, sadly. There are higher level groups than MENSA, but they are probably all co-opted, sadly.

My way of looking at it is as follows (responding to why high IQ people seem to now languish in society):

Because they have instated a culture of mediocrity and the grass that grows highest must be trimmed down to the level of the rest. Highly intelligent people are a threat to the system unless they can be controlled through education and indoctrination mixed with other (dis)incentives. This doesn't work on a large subset of the high IQ population. Therefore, they must be socially engineered into degradation and prevented from ever posing a threat.

Modern society is not designed for the outliers who created everything we know and love but for the lowest common denominator. If some people are smarter, that will hurt the fee-fees of others who are dumber. They must be equalized or neutralized in order for the current system to persist.

Their practice test didn't tell me my exact IQ but just that I qualify. They have a practice test on the Mensa website to see if it's worth you paying for a real test. Haven't gotten around to the real test yet since there isn't a testing center in my city and I'd have to plan a whole day for it. What are the higher level groups above Mensa that you know of?

I agree. We can see this with how suppressed racial IQ studies are. They cannot let the public know about the connection between race and IQ because it would hurt too many people's feelings. We are no longer a society that celebrates achievement. We are now a society where people celebrate weakness and mediocrity, you can see it with how society shames you for being successful or coming from successful people. I have learned the hard way that I need to keep things about myself and my family private, because otherwise, people become spiteful and jealous. It has all been inverted and now the "most oppressed" are praised instead, and a lot of the "most oppressed" are simply too low IQ to achieve anything, even if you gave them a billion dollars.

I just want to meet people with actual aspirations, who want to actually contribute something to the world. Everyone around me is a pseudointellectual tryhard midwit or a retard who wants to just be famous on the Internet. I used to consider becoming a professor in academia, but academia is far too censored and political. Anything I'd want to study in academia would be deemed too controversial for funding.

Will respond more tomorrow (tired), but I'll answer this. Realistically, you might make it into one of the two following groups:

Intertel (99th percentile cutoff or ~135+)

Less likely but possible is the Triple Nine Society (99.9th percentile cutoff or around 146).

Then the ridiculousness begins, where people fraudulently train for tests and achieve absurd scores that don't matter anyway because the tests are not accurate at such high levels (intrinsic to their design):

Very elite

Prometheus Society

Threshold: Top 0.01% (IQ ~160+)

One of the best-known ultra-high-IQ groups.

Mega Society

Threshold: Top 0.001% (IQ ~171+)

Founded by Ronald K. Hoeflin; extremely selective.

Ultra-rare / near-mythical tier

Titan Society

Threshold: Top 0.0001% (IQ ~180+)

Vanishingly small membership.

Omega Society

Threshold: Even higher than Titan (often cited around 1 in several million)

More theoretical than practical—almost no verified members.

The image is a graphic poster with a bold, psychedelic design. At the top, the text "TURN ON TUNE IN DROP OUT" is written in a stylized font, with the words "TUNE" and "DROP OUT" in a larger font size and "TURN ON" and "DROP OUT" in a smaller font size. The background of the poster features a black and white striped pattern with a gradient from black at the top to white at the bottom.

In the center of the poster, there is a close-up of a person's face with their eyes closed, wearing large, round, black sunglasses with white stripes. The person's mouth is open, revealing their teeth. The person's face is split into two halves, with the left half in a pinkish-purple color and the right half in a blueish-purple color. The person's eyes are not visible in the image.

The poster has a square shape with a border that is a lighter shade of blue. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of psychedelic art, often associated with the counterculture movement of the 1960s.

It's not that big of a leap. Narcissists, despite their grandiosity, are narcissists because deep down, they are insecure and that's why they seek out external praise. There's even a subtype of narcissists called vulnerable narcissists where this is much more obvious. It makes sense for an autistic person to be insecure.

Look at Chris Chan. He is clearly autistic, and he is also clearly narcissistic. He literally believes he is Jesus Christ reincarnated now.

I've met several autistic programmers who fit the autistic narcissist category too. Most narcissists are complete retards, but there's a few where they are somewhat smart and they use that to claim they're better than everyone else, to make them feel better about their lack of social ability. I'm self-aware enough to realize I even do this myself sometimes.

I learned too late that places remember things.

In 1991 I learned how to be quiet because being noticed hurt. Our house looked normal, but inside the air didn't move right and sounds stayed too long. I learned to walk slowly, breathe quieter, wear the same clothes. Routine kept me safe. I noticed patterns instead of people. I tried to be easy to forget.

Someone in the house noticed anyway. He fixed things, watched voices change, taught me how to wait. When it got loud, he slowed his breathing until I followed. At night he sang a lullaby wrong, leaving space between breaths. It wasn't for sleep. It was for timing.

Once he whispered, "You don't have to hold it."

Then he left.

Three weeks later, the police said river road, tunnel, handled. They sent me away. The place I went to kept sound. Older boys made rules without saying them. They told me where to stand and when to wait. One day they took me to a tunnel and told me to go in just a little.

Inside, the air felt thick. I slowed my breathing.

Something else breathed back.

Careful. Copying me.

I ran.

Now drivers say that tunnel feels wrong at night. Halfway through, the air gets heavy and breathing fills the car.

If you hear it, don't look twice.

Some things are very good at waiting.

[137 / 14]The image is a meme featuring two cartoon-style images of a duck character. The duck is depicted in a state of distress, with its eyes wide open and its mouth slightly open as if it's gasping for breath. The duck is lying on a bed with a blue blanket, and it appears to be in a state of sleep or unconsciousness.

Above the first image, there is a text that reads, "when you hear something go bump in the dark but then you remember you don't care whether you live or die." This text is a humorous take on the concept of being aware of the potential danger but not caring about the outcome.

Below the first image, there is another image of the same duck character lying on the same bed, but this time it's in a more relaxed state, with its eyes closed and its mouth closed. The text above this image reads, "when you hear something go bump in the dark but then you remember you don't care whether you live or die."

The style of the image is reminiscent of a meme, which is a form of internet humor that often features humorous or satirical content. The use of the duck character and the text is a common element in meme creation, as it is a recognizable and easily relatable figure. The meme seems to be designed to evoke a sense of humor or relatability through the juxtaposition of the duck character's distress and the text's humorous take on the concept of not caring about one's own life or death.

The image is a page from a printed document, likely a book or a magazine, with a black and white color scheme. The text is in English and appears to be a scientific or medical article, discussing the topic of "Muscle" and "Muscle Function." The page is divided into two columns, with the left column containing a series of diagrams and illustrations, and the right column containing text.

The diagrams and illustrations are drawn in a simple, line-based style, with each figure representing a different aspect of the human body. The diagrams include illustrations of muscles, bones, and other anatomical structures. The illustrations are accompanied by text descriptions, which are in a more detailed and technical format, likely explaining the function and structure of the depicted muscles and their connections.

The right column of the page contains a list of bullet points, which likely provide additional information or explanations related to the topic of muscle function. The list is organized in a hierarchical manner, with the first bullet point being "Muscle Function," followed by a list of sub-points, such as "Muscle Anatomy," "Muscle Function," and "Muscle Function in Health and Disease."

The overall style of the image suggests that it is a scholarly or scientific publication, aimed at providing a comprehensive understanding of the topic of muscle function. The use of diagrams and illustrations aids in the understanding of complex concepts, while the text provides a detailed explanation and context.

They did Large groups of meditators participated

The sessions involved standardized meditation practices, specifically Transcendental Meditation (TM) and advanced meditation techniques, performed simultaneously in the same location to create a coordinated group focus

Then they did Control and Drift Adjustments

The researchers analysed whether the baseline drift of the RNG could explain observed effects.

They adjusted results based on pre and post test baseline slopes, concluding that the meditation effects remained statistically atypical even after this correction.

The course of the study, the RNG was run for a total of 94 hours

Trial Structure:

Each trial consisted of 1,000 random bits collected in 10-second blocks

This produced 33,927 trials overall during meditation periods

Baseline Controls:

Before and after the meditation sessions, the RNG was also run with no meditative group present to provide baseline (control) data. These control data were used to check typical randomness (about 50% ones, 50% zeros)

The image is a black and white line graph depicting the cumulative deviation in hits for different algorithms over a range of trials. The x-axis represents the number of trials, ranging from 0 to 12000, while the y-axis represents the cumulative deviation in hits, ranging from -30000 to 30000.

The graph is divided into three lines representing different algorithms: RNGA, RNGB, and CPC. Each line shows a different trend as the number of trials increases.

The RNGA line starts at the bottom of the graph and shows a sharp decline in the initial trials, then it levels off and shows a slight increase. The RNGB line starts at the top of the graph and shows a sharp decline in the initial trials, then it also levels off and shows a slight increase. The CPC line starts at the top of the graph and shows a sharp decline in the initial trials, then it also levels off and shows a slight increase.

The lines are labeled with the corresponding algorithm names, which are "RNGA", "RNGB", and "CPC". The labels are in bold, which makes them stand out against the black background of the graph.

The graph appears to be a statistical analysis of the performance of the algorithms over a large number of trials, with the cumulative deviation in hits being a measure of the performance. The x-axis represents the number of trials, and the y-axis represents the cumulative deviation in hits. The lines show the trend of the cumulative deviation over time, with the RNGA line being the most volatile, followed by the RNGB, and then the CPC line.

Yeah testing "deviations" in a RANDOM number generation that you say is CAUSED by a group of retards imagining things while breathing without weighing that against different people NOT doing that, as well as a placebo group you wrongly train to do the meditation so they think theyre doing it right surely shows more than absolutely nothing.

>Before and after the meditation sessions, the RNG was also run with no meditative group present to provide baseline (control) data. These control data were used to check typical randomness (about 50% ones, 50% zeros)

Look at this graph, this indicates their meditation caused the RNG to skew! It did it did mommy! Their imagination caused the computer to fluctuate in its RNG program(the program that is elucidated upon at all beyond being alluded to as existing)

Intrusive thoughts. Shadow people and animals.

Eventually, you may be able to communicate.

But it's nothing like in the movies. Just an odd series of coincidences with a ton of

You can simply Google search. It's very simple. You just clean your house and your fireplace if you have one. Make your bed, etc. Some people pour milk near their fireplace or animals or simply on the ground which I didn't do. I chose Bridget because she's good compared to all of them and helps everyone. Worse case scenario it's not like you're getting possessed if you "fail". There's no need for advanced shit. So maybe I'll admit it's more of a holiday tradition than a ritual but it's still something.

I work along side with demons. The results are immediate if sometimes not confusing and open to interpretation; I asked one for a favor for a painful death for someone I knew to save a loved one from their torment and my enemy died later on the same day via a freak accident. Shadow people, sudden revelations, and feeling the physical embrace and whispers of those I called upon are my reality. Things I have experienced. Call it a LARP if you wish, but these events are forever burned in my mind.

The death wish was only one of 2 times I have ever experienced something immediately and so directly.

Maybe I'm crazy. But only so many coincidences can stack up. Maybe you have to be a little crazy to have one foot in the door to the other side.

What were you expecting from Brigid?

First of all, assuming it's all real, that's the reason I didn't mess with demons or entities like Loki, etc. Also, whatever you're dishing out in magic comes back, which some don't believe in. But I played it safe. I didn't ask for anything or chant I just wanted to see if she's real or if I felt different. You usually ask her for health for you and everyone. You asked for the death of someone which is crazy.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with a white and gray color scheme. The character has long, flowing white hair and is wearing a white shirt with a yellow collar. The character's face is obscured by a large, black, circular object that appears to be a mouthpiece, filled with what looks like smoke or vapor. The character's eyes are visible through the circular object, and they are looking upwards. The character's ears are adorned with red earrings. The background of the image is plain and white, emphasizing the character and the circular object. There are no texts present in the image. The style of the illustration is cartoonish, with a focus on the character's expressive features and the unusual object they are holding.

The image is a digital illustration featuring two characters in a snowy outdoor setting. The character on the left is a young woman with dark hair, wearing a black top and a pink coat with fur trim. She is sitting on the snow with her head resting on her hand, appearing to be in a contemplative or sad state. The character on the right is a young man with dark hair, wearing a brown coat with fur trim and a dark hat. He is standing upright, looking at the woman with a concerned expression. Both characters are wearing dark clothing suitable for cold weather. The background shows a bare tree and a bench, suggesting a winter setting. There are red stains on the snow, possibly from blood or other substances, indicating some sort of disturbance or event. The overall mood of the image is somber and reflective.

You're basically doing it wrong. Ritual isn't just "play random music and clean my room". There's a process to prayer, and it requires sacrifice.

If you want a rundown, check here. It's contextually Germanic but the process is basically the same in broad strokes for whatever pagan tradition you're going for.

The image is a vibrant and detailed fresco painting, depicting a scene of religious or mythological significance. The central focus is a large, ornate structure with a spiral staircase, surrounded by a multitude of figures. These figures are engaged in various activities, such as dancing, playing musical instruments, and interacting with the structure. The colors used are bright and varied, with a palette that includes shades of blue, green, yellow, and orange. The style of the painting is reminiscent of Renaissance or Baroque art, characterized by its dramatic use of light and shadow, and the emphasis on the human form and the interplay of light and shadow. The painting is executed in a realistic style, with meticulous attention to detail and a sense of depth and three-dimensionality. The overall composition and the detailed depiction of the figures suggest a narrative or story being told, possibly from a religious or mythological context.

Posting only because OP sounds like a limited hangout but anons are sharing anyway. Some don't know fire can burn. I once did a working with a very old god who's most popular as a demon now. Nothing fancy, soft communion had been established many years prior so it was more of a final and simple hurrah. After sleeping I awoke the next day to a knock on my door, a family member telling me that another whom I was closest to had woken up that morning, vomited all over the bed and floor, then fallen over dead. I knew what I was getting into but was still caught off guard. My life's plain and simple but it is quite a breeze. Most entities will demand of you whatever ties your ego most to this world, it will usually be something the simulation has already provided for you which (or who) is dear to your heart. It's not always maliciously taken, the emotional hardening and hit to your ego is part of the process, like they say with psychedelics being a speedy yet dangerous route to piercing the veil. You already know from stories of Hollywood conspiracies that many don't take it well even after knowingly signing the contract, so to speak. Working with gods requires circumstance, they initiate the call not you and the work develops over a lifetime, usually several. Otherwise like anons say we run the risk of offending them, or unknowingly buying into their agenda without knowing the full price, or maybe we won't reach them at all and instead attract things from the lower realms that only want to take advantage of us. More malicious entities never fulfill our true desires, they actively keep us from manifesting them to feed on our eternal frustration and eventual breakdown from the net loss.

Stop doing shit "for" anyone else or their approval, not even for their attention. This is why women run from you guys, they can smell the insincerity and desperate, single-track mindset.

You don't do any rituals or prayers demanding or expecting a response, the same way you don't give a woman a gift and automatically "deserve" a date with her. The offering is to sway them or get their attention; it guarantees nothing.

Just be chill and normal. Keep doing rituals, that's fine, but instead of making this a once-a-year-and-done special occasion, call up Brigid every time you clean your room, show how she's an active and constant influence in your life. Tell her and show her you appreciate the health and happiness that comes from a clean space, and whatever else she has domain over etc. You don't even have to talk out loud. Praying in your head is fine, they're supernatural, remember?

What you're doing is starting a relationship (hopefully), not pumping and dumping someone and getting the task out of the way until her next relevant holiday.

What you spend your time on IS what you worship. Anyone can send $5 to a church or a friend, not everyone will take the time out to spend it with someone who needs it. This is also why blood sacrifices are a meme- they want the effort and sweat of your labors 99% of the time, not you slicing your hand open like a fag and figuring your room will clean itself if you name the right gods.

If you don't feel, hear, or see a difference within a month or two, try someone else. And if you stop doing the task after that, no longer cleaning as fervently and devotedly... it just shows that your actions were empty rather than genuine. Can't blame her for deigning to respond to you, can you?

No you fucking retard. Anon is asking if you looked for some basis in actual history of magical practice for what you tried to do in order to imitate them, some grimoire, leyend, chronicle, treatise, tablet, sect or order, modern book. Something.

Not to link witchywitchyfreya.com or whatever, Google summary isn't a source either. If you don't read often or have the curiosity to do experiments you're not fit to be a magician.

I'm not a Pagan. I did try a ritual one time and it worked.

>be me

>bow hunt for 4 years without success

>try to invoke Artemis >retain semen for a few weeks >few days before hunt >say fuck it and try ritual offering >prepare altar which was just my coffee table kek >place bow, arrow, candle, frankincense resin, deer shed I found innawoods, and empty bowl on altar >find a random Artemis prayer online >try to memorize but retard >basically say first few lines with strong intent and belief and ask Artemis for success on hunt >cleanse bow and arrow with smoke from frankincense >pour water into offering bowl >feel nervous and start sweating >go to sleep

>5 days later kill a monster buck with my bow >easiest hunt of my life

Did it work? Idk but I found success. I think I fucked up because I promised I would offer a portion of the deer if successful and never did. It was my first kill and fucked up field dressing it leading to some meat being lost. I did bury a portion of the meat in the woods a year later if that's consolation. Next year failed hunt despite doing another ritual.

Alright, tell me everything you know about Homo Capensis, the humanoid species that allegedly runs the world and has large elongated skulls and higher IQs. I do think that the "We are all Homo Sapiens" stuff is bullshit, since Sub-Saharan Africans are clearly closer to Homo Erectus than Whites are. Jews have more of a percentage of Neanderthal than everyone else too. I know someone who has connections to Bohemian Grove and her family's DNA test literally shoved Neanderthal DNA. I don't buy the "elongated skulls are all just from artificial elongation" either, since you can tell the difference between artificial and natural elongated skulls. Plus, it begs the question, why did ancient cultures want to elongate their skulls? They probably wanted to appear more like the higher-IQ naturally-elongated-skull Homo Capensis.

But I'm new to this theory, so I want to know more about it and if it's bullshit. It does make sense why popes wear big hats if they're trying to hide their elongated skulls, and if you look at pictures of Pope Francis without any hat, his skull is fucking huge (see pic). Are there any other notable examples of huge-skulled elites? Are Homo Capensis related to Neanderthals in any way?

More background info on Homo Capensis:

- Karen Hudes, former World Bank Adviser, claims that she had worked with those of this species. In addition to the elongated skulls, she says they have copper-based blood and an average of 180 IQ.
- She says Dr. Edward Spencer, a Yale-trained neurologist, supports her assertions with references to evidence like the Paracas skull in Peru, Boksop Man in South Africa, and the Adam's Calendar site.

A lot of these skulls are indeed artificially elongated but the natural ones found in Peru for example had red and blonde hair, probably had green or blue eyes and their maternal haplogroups originated in the north pontic/black sea region.

The Scythians/sarmatians also practiced skull elongation.

The image is a collage of two separate paintings, each depicting a different scene. The top painting is a historical artwork, likely a painting from the Renaissance period, depicting a religious scene. It shows a group of people gathered around a large stone altar, with one person kneeling in front of the altar, seemingly praying or offering something. The figures are dressed in Renaissance-style clothing, and the background is a natural landscape with trees and a clear sky.

The bottom painting is a surrealistic artwork, featuring a multitude of faces superimposed over a central figure. The faces are distorted and appear to be in various states of distress or fear, with some appearing to be screaming or crying. The central figure is also distorted, with exaggerated features and a large, open mouth. The background is a dark, moody color, with a sense of foreboding or chaos.

The text at the bottom of the image provides a caption that reads "Warwick Papworth: The Divine Human Sacrifice." This suggests that the image is a juxtaposition of two different artistic styles, one representing a religious scene from the Renaissance and the other representing a surrealistic interpretation of a human sacrifice.

The background of the image is a gradient of light gray, providing a neutral backdrop that allows the skulls to stand out. The image is a digital rendering, and the style is realistic with a focus on anatomical detail. There are no texts other than the labels on the skulls.

The Paracas skulls you posted are elongated in the parietal region and have a single parietal plate, not the 2 fused parietal plates you would see in a human skull.

Neanderthal skulls have the same basic structure as a human skull, and are elongated at the occipital, not the parietal. There may also be a connection to Rh- negative blood types, as populations with a high rate of Rh- blood tend to also have a high rate of Neanderthal DNA (the Basque people being the most extreme example).

The archetypal Jewish face tends to be much more Neanderthal than Capensis in structure. Think of people who don't need to tell you they are Jewish - you can just tell (e.g. Ari Shaffir, Israel Zangwell, Barbra Streisand, etc). They have a certain extra robustness of the features combined with a front-to-back elongation of the head that makes them stand out in a crowd.

European nobility, by contrast, usually have a horizontally elongated head, combined with much more gracile facial features. This is much more consistent with the Capensis type. Juan Carlos I of Spain is a strong example of the type.

I would therefore strongly suspect that the original Hebrews were Neanderthal hybrids, not Capensis. Being the last of their kind would have given them a stronger group identity, while their genetic uniqueness will have made them stand out from other groups. Under the circumstances, it would have been easy to develop the idea that they are the chosen people, destined for greatness.

Jews exhibiting the Capensis phenotype are therefore most likely the result of strategic marriages with Gentile aristocrats. Extreme examples such as the Rothschilds and Goldsmiths are found at the height of banking and finance, because they had to engage in a great number of these marriages to secure the initial startup capital for their respective dynasties.

The image is a collage of four separate photographs, each with a different visual element. At the top, there is a large text that reads "Facebook Community Standards team," suggesting that the image might be related to a discussion or controversy on Facebook.

The bottom right of the image contains a circular image with a caption that reads "Rothschild bloodline direct descendant of Pharaoh, known as that man named Uncle Sam."

The overall style of the image is humorous and seems to be a satirical or ironic representation of the Facebook Community Standards team. The use of the word "Uncle Sam" in the captions is a play on the name of the U.S. President, and the inclusion of a skull in the first photograph is a reference to the famous "Uncle Sam" poster. The humor is derived from the juxtaposition of the serious and serious-looking individuals with the light-hearted and humorous captions.

The big head is a deception.

People assume erroneously that because the cranium is bigger, the brain matter is the same density.

Their cranium is twice to three times as big as ours, but it's only up to 80% as dense.

80% the density, 80% the neurons, 80% the cognition. And that still erroneously assumes their lobes develop the same way, and that they have the same lobes we do.

PSYCHIATRIC PROFILE: PATIENT NO. 67 Anonymous Thu 05 Feb 2026 14:38:59

No.41920675 ViewReplyOriginalReport

Patient No. 67 presents with a severe trauma-linked dissociative condition characterized by identity schizophrenic disorder, narrative reconstruction, and selective amnesia. The disorder manifests as a sustained alternative self-concept designed to neutralize intolerable autobiographical facts. Symptom presentation is internally coherent and paranoid of contradiction.

Patient No. 67's illness is best described as a defensive reality architecture rather than a conventional delusion. The disorder is adaptive in the short term and catastrophic when dismantled. Stability is achieved through maintenance of the constructed identity; recovery requires acceptance of self-authored culpability, which the subject intermittently attains and then rejects.

Condition classified as treatment-resistant with episodic lucidity. Will try to rationalize amoral behavior to avoid accountability.

maybe this further explains why I love working 6pm - 6am, solar activity is blasting the opposite side of the planet.

[56 / 7]The image features a stylized medical symbol with a snake coiled around a staff. The staff is golden and has a black top, resembling a staff of Asclepius, which is a Greek god of medicine. The snake, which is brown and black, is coiled around the staff, with its head resting on the top of the staff. The snake's body is coiled around the staff, and its tail hangs down. The background of the image is plain white, emphasizing the symbol. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of classical medical art, with a focus on the symbolism of the staff and the snake.

The background of the image is a rich, deep red with gold accents, which contrasts with the blue and gold of the figure's attire and the throne. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Asian art, with a focus on the intricate details and the use of color to convey emotion and power. There are no discernible texts or inscriptions within the image. The image is a digital rendering, likely created for artistic or religious purposes.

As in pre cum?

Well I'm pretty sure that's just hormonal/genetic and I think that a way to heal from it is not to get hard in the first place (or rather to shorten the time you are hard).

Let me give you an story:

One day in some random town a guy decides that he wants to make a fish shop; so he got all the supplies and stuff and finally made it. He then he finally put a sign in front of his shop, saying, "Great fresh fish here".

After a while a guy comes into the store, he gets the fish he needs and goes to pay for it.

"Hey why do you have the word great in your sign? when I'm coming to buy fish here I would already assume that the fish is high quality?", Says the customer. The owner thinks for the while and says

"you know what your right." Then the owner takes the great part out of his sign and now what's left is "fresh fish here".

After a while another guy comes into the store, he gets the fish he needs and goes to pay for it.

"Hey why do you have the word fresh in your sign? everyone sells fresh fish, no one eats old fish; if anything its making me worried that you have to reassure me that they are fresh." Says the customer. The owner thinks for the while and says

"you know what your right." Then the owner takes the fresh part out of his sign and now what's left is "fish here".

After a while another guy comes into the store, he gets the fish he needs and goes to pay for it.

"Hey why do you have the word fish in your sign? Its so obvious that its a fish shop, i can smell the fish from the other side of the street!" says the customer. The owner thinks for the while and says

"you know what your right." Then the owner takes the Fish part out of his sign and now what's left is... Nothing

All this stuff is a dead end if you're relying on publicly available information and/or don't have a teacher (with literally maybe one or two exceptions that I know of, but even if you stumbled upon it, you don't even know what to look for, so you'd probably gloss over it anyway).

Just know that anything involving visualization is nonsense and won't get you anywhere in a million years (well, maybe it'll get you some major deviations, that's something I guess).

The actual method involves a borderline physiological process. You have to breath a certain way, squeeze your perinium a certain way, and move a certain way, all in a specifically coordinated way.

Even then, if you somehow managed to acquire the appropriate method it's a spiritual dead end anyway. There's guys that spend 15 years of their lives just to cultivate the basics just so that they can zap somebody (with the aid of a teacher that is, actual development takes even longer than that which is another reason this is a waste of time) meanwhile they still smoke, drink, get angry and get sick themselves. I've known and seen several of these guys, who are relatively high-level, that became disillusioned with it all and turned towards what you'd call "shen" type methods i.e. the more commonly known mental cultivation through meditation, etc.

Unless you are specifically wanting to be a healer above all else, and can study this stuff under the tutelage of legitimate teacher, you're just wasting time.

P.S. Qi Gong is useless. Most forms are nonsense, and the ones that aren't just circulate energy. Most people don't have a sufficient amount of energy to begin with, so you're just circulating nothing. You're also just fatiguing yourself even more by not letting what little energy you have consolidate and settle by doing qi gong. Worst case scenario you're circulating sickness throughout your body.

The image is a vibrant and detailed depiction of a deity, possibly a Buddhist deity, in a seated position. The deity is adorned with a large, ornate headdress and is surrounded by a multitude of smaller figures, some of which are also wearing headdresses. The deity's attire is predominantly blue and red, with a fiery orange and yellow halo around its head. The background is a rich tapestry of colors, with a mix of blue, red, and gold hues, and is filled with various figures and symbols that are characteristic of Buddhist iconography. The overall style of the image is traditional and ornate, typical of Buddhist art.

>Most people don't have a sufficient amount of energy to begin with, so you're just circulating nothing just invoke the energies of deities and circulate that (except if its fierce deities you are invoking, then the energy is not tameable and you can only surrender and let the energy do its own thing)

Kinda thing with the kundalini.

I already posted this in the general but if you want to passively raise your kundalini you should practice/partake in: fasting, a raw diet, overt-generosity, no fap, compassionate action, breathwork, meditation and adventure

If you want to be more practical with it you can hatha yoga.

I will teach you a simple meditation method in the next post

The image is a black and white line drawing of a person in a meditative pose. The person is depicted with their eyes closed, and their body is in a straight line, with their hands resting on their knees and their feet touching the ground. The person's head is slightly tilted back, and their mouth is closed. The drawing shows the person's upper body, with the torso and arms clearly visible.

At the top of the image, there is a text that reads "Eyelids firmly closed see meditation instructions(s)" and at the bottom, there is another line of text that says "Elbows relaxed Fingers pointing down, and relaxed". The text is in a simple, sans-serif font and is positioned to the left of the image. The overall style of the image is minimalistic and focuses on the depiction of the person's posture and the accompanying text.

1. Place a cushion or folded blanket on the floor. Sit upon the blanket or cushion using only the front edge, or first third of the support this assists by tilting the hips forward. Have your legs stretched out in front of you in preparation for bending.

2. Bend your right leg under your left thigh and the left leg under the right thigh, assuming the cross-legged "tailor pose." Check that your kneecaps are roughly level with each other. If they are not, your trunk will lean slightly to the lower side, disturbing body symmetry and balance.

3. Keep your spine erect and your head nicely poised upon your shoulders.

4. Place your hands, palms down, upon your knees in such a fashion that they will not slip off. Be certain that your elbows relax naturally against your body.

5. Firmly close your eyes as if you were drawing down shutters. Continue to keep your eyelids under control for the duration of the session.

6. You are now introverted within yourself. Concentrate your mind upon the natural rhythm of your breath, control yourself from dreaming, reasoning, or otherwise becoming mentally active, and keep your body erect, motionless, and as relaxed as possible. Concentrate upon just "being." Meditate upon the movement of Life Force by attentively observing the natural, spontaneous breath cycle as it goes through four phases: i.e., inhalation, momentary pause, exhalation, momentary pause. Each time your mind wanders, return to this breath awareness, simultaneously cultivating a sensation of total frozen immobility in your body-utter motionlessness.

No

But in theory kinda (heavy kinda) yes.

There is such a thing called a phantom limb, a phantom limb is something which people can feel when they have lost an arm or was never even born with a limb in the first place. And for some reason they can feel the exact sensation of their hand there (but usually it is a painful one)

There was this one instance where a man had this phantom limb from losing his and he went to his friend (I think his friend I'm not 100% sure, but if you are really curious I can conjure up the original source of the story for that) who also was a practitioner of alternative medicine (qi etc) and he could cure the limb, but when they was on the table ready to do it the person didn't want it fixed as he was scared as he didn't want to lose what he had left of his arm as he wasn't ready to let go (sorry for rambling on)

If you can cultivate an extremely strong life force you might also be able to feel the sensation of your phantom forearm

The image is a black and white diagram illustrating a posture for an Egyptian chair pose. The diagram is labeled with the title "EGYPTIAN CHAIR POSE" at the top. It depicts a person sitting on a chair with their legs crossed, with their hands resting on their lap and their feet flat on the floor. The person's body is oriented in a way that suggests they are facing forward, with their head resting on their hands.

The diagram includes various labeled points that correspond to different parts of the body. These points are numbered and labeled as follows:

- Nose in line with seat (nose in line with seat seat)
- Spine free from back of chair
- Elbows relaxed
- Hands palm down (palm down)
- Hands in front of body (palm in front of body)
- Hands on lap (palm on lap)
- Hands on feet (palm on feet)
- Four supports (cushions, backs)

The diagram also includes a scale at the bottom, indicating the size of the chair in centimeters. The scale ranges from 30 to 90 centimeters.

The image is a simple and clear representation of the Egyptian chair pose, designed to guide the viewer in understanding the correct posture for sitting on a chair.

I'm sorry to hear that; Well it isn't necessarily the yogas fault, it could be that you might have been uneven therefore it might of put stress in one side than the other. In that case I would recommend doing it in-front of a mirror so that you can see your posture. Alright here then, I will give you a chair methord seeing as you can't really do any abstract ground methods:

In this methord I would want you to add a simple visualization to the exercise, such as imagining an object in your mind's eye: a geometric pattern, a flower, a color, or an image.

Performance Time

1. Perform this exercise for a minimum of five minutes in the first week, rapidly building to twenty minutes by the third week. Using a timing device (pocket alarm, watch, kitchen timer, etc.) is helpful.

Check Points

1. After commencement of the exercise, check your elbows to see that they are relaxed and swing freely.
2. Check your eyelids to see that they are steady and controlled. Any flicker- ing of the lashes indicates mental agitation and lack of absorption in the exercise.
3. Make certain that you do not unconsciously slip into a slouch and thus bend the upper (dorsal) spine.

As with any of the classical Hatha asanas, very distinct performance prob- lems arise. Let us list them along with appropriate remedies.

1. The pressure of the floor upon your feet may cause pain and thus distract attention. This is overcome by practice in which the feet are gradually conditioned.
2. The spine may tend to slouch. The remedy lies in sustained, disciplined effort.
3. The mind may become agitated and refuse to become calm. We follow the same principle of quieting a bored or upset child: We provide something suitable in the way of distraction, such as concentration upon simple objects. This particular problem is the crux of the exercise. Eventually, you train yourself to relax mentally upon beginning the exercise, and this conditioning becomes stronger with repetition.

Good day, thanks for the thread, but:

1. Which of these methods (or maybe it was one you didn't list) allowed you to feel qi/energy for the first time?
2. How long did you have to train in that method (months or weeks) and how consistently (30 mins per day or 1 hour per day)?
3. What was foreign & distinct enough about that energetic experience that you knew that it worked and you felt qi/energy for the first time (it would have to be distinct from the usual sensations you already can feel when you focus or else you could very well just be falling for a placebo)?

Third question is important. Focus long enough on your body and you start noticing and feeling a lot more of the background movements and processes taking place, and it's very easy for someone to think that any of these sensations is qi. Heck if you wear earplugs for a few minutes you can start hearing your own heartbeat, and this is a perfect example of the phenomena (occlusion effect). As your focus narrows and is strengthened you just notice more of the smaller sensations, sounds, etc.

So how would anyone know if they truly felt qi or not, the sensation would have to be "foreign" and "distinct" enough that it's obvious.

I've tried a good few methods, nothing really worked, and I don't think I'm alone in the desire to not take part in another time wasting wild goose chase.

If the methods you are stating did not personally help you feel qi/energy (especially for the first time, as these things "work" more easily after once they work the first time) then they likely won't work for anybody else either, it's more like a game of luck and trial testing random methods at that point, the few that get lucky and succeed will call this thread amazing but the majority will just end up wasting time without a clear outline and a deadline to know when to stop to move onto the next method.

Thank you

Oof this will be long

> Which of these methods (or maybe it was one you didn't list) allowed you to feel qi/energy for the first time?

Alright lets first go on what I didn't list, on the daoist/taoist torrent file I posted there is a video completion (around 5 hours long) demystifying and teaching the essence of qigong (which in of itself is not a very good term as it generalises way to much Chinese traditions). It is Andrew Nugent-Heads tutorial, his demystifying section was amazing I'm surprised he got so much right, although I more practical work is harder to follow as a lot of the stuff he did was with a partner. Overall I would recommend (if you're looking for a legit western source) to look at his works and who he affiliate with. Honestly one of the most honest westerns I have seen when relating to subjects such as this.

> 2. How long did you have to train in that method (months or weeks) and how consistently (30 mins per day or 1 hour per day)?

Well depends what you want to practice, with you want to conjure fire or electricity like John Chang then 10s of 20s of years.

If you want just the health benefits and a solid foundation I would recommend like 30 so minutes of hatha yoga/mediation every day; if you do that you will start to naturally get more mental clarity, lower blood pressure, etc. If you have more time, I will would recommend reading the sources I gave you and then learn the more advised time extensive practices

> 3. What was foreign & distinct enough about that energetic experience that you knew that it worked and you felt qi/energy for the first time (it would have to be distinct from the usual sensations you already can feel when you focus or else you could very well

Extremely levels of heat with my hands, as if they are burning up and extensive tingling, addition you would be able to identify and be able to feel the blood flow within your body and to make sure that your not bullshitting yourself you can get a panther and "transfer" it on his body that he would start to develop extreme sweats. (You would learn this one andrews videos if I remember correctly (also he is on YouTube and has some books relating to this subject)) If you really want to feel something distinct then a kundalini awakening (I have all the sources up there) would be something up your ally but you don't really seem that interested in that.

> I've tried a good few methods, nothing really worked, and I don't think I'm alone in the desire to not take part in another time wasting wild goose chase

Completely understand there is a lot of new age bullshit rn which is shitting up the whole sphere so I understand where you're coming from. But there are countless reports of health benefits and validation of these claims just look at John Chang and his disciples you would think that if John Chang was bullshitting then he wouldn't be as eager to help people trying to discredit his work additionally he has had 100s of clients which have healed from his acupuncture work and all his disciples which have been with him for years never once call bullshit and make books on his work (I posted it here) although they are only giving pretty surface level information as it's traditional not to spread all the secrets to the public.

then they likely won't work for anybody else either, it's more like a game of luck and trial testing random methods at that point, the few that get lucky and succeed

Kinda yes, like many thing you are either born with it or your not, (only like 8/10 people would be able to experience something) it's just that some people are wired differently.

To finish this off I think your looking at it in the wrong way; people can spend months not feeling any sensation whatsoever and their fine with that as the whole point of this isn't just to feel but rather just another way of life. If you come into this like

Also if you're really curious to feel a sensation then I have something I made myself.

What you need to do is place your hands out like the image i posted and your fingers aligned, the. I would want you to move your hands back and forth in a slow motion (slowing down when you fingers as close together (make sure they don't touch)), keep doing this and slowly increase your distance every time you do it. You will start to feel a repulsion or force between your fingers, when this force is easily identified you can run your fingers across (again not touching) each other and you will start to feel bumps on where the fingers force are.

I have done this with multiple time and have tested this with my friends with positive results

character, with a predominantly blue and gold color scheme. The figure's face is characterized by a fierce expression with large, red eyes and a wide, open mouth, suggesting a sense of anger or power. The eyes are accentuated with a red tint, and the mouth is adorned with a large, curved, red tongue. The figure's hair is styled in a manner that gives it a serpentine appearance, and it is adorned with a necklace and a decorative headpiece.

The figure is seated on a throne-like seat, which is embellished with intricate gold and red designs, and is supported by a large, ornate, gold-colored base. The throne's design includes a circular medallion with a pattern that includes floral motifs and geometric shapes. The figure's attire includes a blue robe with a red and gold border, and a sash with a pattern that includes a combination of red and gold colors.

The background of the image is a rich, deep red with gold accents, which contrasts with the blue and gold of the figure's attire and the throne. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Asian art, with a focus on the intricate details and the use of color to convey emotion and power. There are no discernible texts or inscriptions within the image. The image is a digital rendering, likely created for artistic or religious purposes.

As in pre cum?

Well I'm pretty sure that's just hormonal/genetic and I think that a way to heal from it is not to get hard in the first place (or rather to shorten the time you are hard).

Let me give you an story:

One day in some random town a guy decides that he wants to make a fish shop; so he got all the supplies and stuff and finally made it. He then he finally put a sign in front of his shop, saying, "Great fresh fish here".

After a while a guy comes into the store, he gets the fish he needs and goes to pay for it.

"Hey why do you have the word great in your sign? when I'm coming to buy fish here I would already assume that the fish is high quality?", Says the customer. The owner thinks for the while and says

"you know what your right." Then the owner takes the great part out of his sign and now what's left is "fresh fish here".

After a while another guy comes into the store, he gets the fish he needs and goes to pay for it.

"Hey why do you have the word fresh in your sign? everyone sells fresh fish, no one eats old fish; if anything its making me worried that you have to reassure me that they are fresh." Says the customer. The owner thinks for the while and says

"you know what your right." Then the owner takes the fresh part out of his sign and now what's left is "fish here".

After a while another guy comes into the store, he gets the fish he needs and goes to pay for it.

"Hey why do you have the word fish in your sign? Its so obvious that its a fish shop, i can smell the fish from the other side of the street!" says the customer. The owner thinks for the while and says

"you know what your right." Then the owner takes the Fish part out of his sign and now what's left is... Nothing

If you just go into it raw dog and just suppresses yourself from your desires you tend to become aggressive. That's why there is a trope of the non-fapper being easily agitated

All this stuff is a dead end if you're relying on publicly available information and/or don't have a teacher (with literally maybe one or two exceptions that I know of, but even if you stumbled upon it, you don't even know what to look for, so you'd probably gloss over it anyway).

Just know that anything involving visualization is nonsense and won't get you anywhere in a million years (well, maybe it'll get you some major deviations, that's something I guess).

The actual method involves a borderline physiological process. You have to breathe a certain way, squeeze your perineum a certain way, and move a certain way, all in a specifically coordinated way.

Even then, if you somehow managed to acquire the appropriate method it's a spiritual dead end anyway. There's guys that spend 15 years of their lives just to cultivate the basics just so that they can zap somebody (with the aid of a teacher that is, actual development takes even longer than that which is another reason this is a waste of time) meanwhile they still smoke, drink, get angry and get sick themselves. I've known and seen several of these guys, who are relatively high-level, that became disillusioned with it all and turned towards what you'd call "shen" type methods i.e. the more commonly known mental cultivation through meditation, etc.

Unless you are specifically wanting to be a healer above all else, and can study this stuff under the tutelage of a legitimate teacher, you're just wasting time.

P.S. Qi Gong is useless. Most forms are nonsense, and the ones that aren't just circulate energy. Most people don't have a sufficient amount of energy to begin with, so you're just circulating nothing. You're also just fatiguing yourself even more by not letting what little energy you have consolidate and settle by doing qi gong. Worst case scenario you're circulating sickness throughout your body.

The image is a vibrant and detailed depiction of a deity, possibly a Buddhist deity, in a seated position. The deity is adorned with a large, ornate headdress and is surrounded by a multitude of smaller figures, some of which are also wearing headdresses. The deity's attire is predominantly blue and red, with a fiery orange and yellow halo around its head. The background is a rich tapestry of colors, with a mix of blue, red, and gold hues, and is filled with various figures and symbols that are characteristic of Buddhist iconography. The overall style of the image is traditional and ornate, typical of Buddhist art.

The image is a black and white line drawing of a person in a meditative pose. The person is depicted with their eyes closed, and their body is in a straight line, with their hands resting on their knees and their feet touching the ground. The person's head is slightly tilted back, and their mouth is closed. The drawing shows the person's upper body, with the torso and arms clearly visible.

At the top of the image, there is a text that reads "Eyelids firmly closed see meditation instructions(s)" and at the bottom, there is another line of text that says "Elbows relaxed Fingers pointing down, and relaxed". The text is in a simple, sans-serif font and is positioned to the left of the image. 1. Place a cushion or folded blanket on the floor. Sit upon the blanket or cushion using only the front edge, or first third of the support this assists by tilting the hips forward. Have your legs stretched out in front of you in preparation for bending.

2. Bend your right leg under your left thigh and the left leg under the right thigh, assuming the cross-legged "tailor pose." Check that your kneecaps are roughly level with each other. If they are not, your trunk will lean slightly to the lower side, disturbing body symmetry and balance.

3. Keep your spine erect and your head nicely poised upon your shoulders.

4. Place your hands, palms down, upon your knees in such a fashion that they will not slip off. Be certain that your elbows relax naturally against your body.

5. Firmly close your eyes as if you were drawing down shutters. Continue to keep your eyelids under control for the duration of the session.

6. You are now introverted within yourself. Concentrate your mind upon the natural rhythm of your breath, control yourself from dreaming, reasoning, or otherwise becoming mentally active, and keep your body erect, motionless, and as relaxed as possible. Concentrate upon just "being." Meditate upon the movement of Life Force by attentively observing the natural, spontaneous breath cycle as it goes through four phases: i.e., inhalation, momentary pause, exhalation, momentary pause. Each time your mind wanders, return to this breath awareness, simultaneously cultivating a sensation of total frozen immobility in your body-utter motionlessness.

But in theory kinda (heavy kinda) yes.

There is such a thing called a phantom limb, a phantom limb is something which people can feel when they have lost an arm or was never even born with a limb in the first place. And for some reason they can feel the exact sensation of their hand there (but usually it is a painful one)

There was this one instance where a man had this phantom limb from losing his and he went to his friend (I think his friend I'm not 100% sure, but if you are really curious I can conjure up the original source of the story for that) who also was a practitioner of alternative medicine (qi etc) and he could cure the limb, but when they was on the table ready to do it the person didn't want it fixed as he was scared as he didn't want to lose what he had left of his arm as he wasn't ready to let go (sorry for rambling on)

If you can cultivate an extremely strong life force you might also be able to feel the sensation of your phantom limb

The image is a black and white diagram illustrating a posture for an Egyptian chair pose. The diagram is labeled with the title "EGYPTIAN CHAIR POSE" at the top. It depicts a person sitting on a chair with their legs crossed, with their hands resting on their lap and their feet flat on the floor. The person's body is oriented in a way that suggests they are facing forward, with their head resting on their hands.

The diagram includes various labeled points that correspond to different parts of the body. These points are numbered and labeled as follows:

- Nose in line with seat (nose in line with seat seat)
- Spine free from back of chair
- Elbows relaxed
- Hands palm down (palm down)
- Hands in front of body (palm in front of body)
- Hands on lap (palm on lap)
- Hands on feet (palm on feet)
- Four supports (cushions, backs)

The diagram also includes a scale at the bottom, indicating the size of the chair in centimeters. The scale ranges from 30 to 90 centimeters.

The image is a simple and clear representation of the Egyptian chair pose, designed to guide the viewer in understanding the correct posture for sitting on a chair.

I'm sorry to hear that; Well it isn't necessarily the yogas fault, it could be that you might have been uneven therefore it might of put stress in one side than the other. In that case I would recommend doing it in-front of a mirror so that you can see your posture.

Alright here then, I will give you a chair methord seeing as you can't really do any abstract ground methods:

In this methord I would want you to add a simple visualization to the exercise, such as imagining an object in your mind's eye: a geometric pattern, a flower, a color, or an image.

Performance Time

1. Perform this exercise for a minimum of five minutes in the first week, rapidly building to twenty minutes by the third week. Using a timing device (pocket alarm, watch, kitchen timer, etc.) is helpful.

Check Points

1. After commencement of the exercise, check your elbows to see that they are relaxed and swing freely.

2. Check your eyelids to see that they are steady and controlled. Any flicker- ing of the lashes indicates mental agitation and lack of absorption in the exercise.

3. Make certain that you do not unconsciously slip into a slouch and thus bend the upper (dorsal) spine.

As with any of the classical Hatha asanas, very distinct performance prob- lems arise. Let us list them along with appropriate remedies.

1. The pressure of the floor upon your feet may cause pain and thus distract attention. This is overcome by practice in which the feet are gradually conditioned.

2. The spine may tend to slouch. The remedy lies in sustained, disciplined effort.

3. The mind may become agitated and refuse to become calm. We follow the same principle of quieting a bored or upset child: We provide something suitable in the way of distraction, such as concentration upon simple objects. This particular problem is the crux of the exercise. Eventually, you train yourself to relax mentally upon beginning the exercise, and this conditioning becomes stronger with repetition.

Good day, thanks for the thread, but:

1. Which of these methods (or maybe it was one you didn't list) allowed you to feel qi/energy for the first time?
2. How long did you have to train in that method (months or weeks) and how consistently (30 mins per day or 1 hour per day)?
3. What was foreign & distinct enough about that energetic experience that you knew that it worked and you felt qi/energy for the first time (it would have to be distinct from the usual sensations you already can feel when you focus or else you could very well just be falling for a placebo)?

Third question is important. Focus long enough on your body and you start noticing and feeling a lot more of the background movements and processes taking place, and it's very easy for someone to think that any of these sensations is qi. Heck if you wear earplugs for a few minutes you can start hearing your own heartbeat, and this is a perfect example of the phenomena (occlusion effect). As your focus narrows and is strengthened you just notice more of the smaller sensations, sounds, etc.

So how would anyone know if they truly felt qi or not, the sensation would have to be "foreign" and "distinct" enough that it's obvious.

I've tried a good few methods, nothing really worked, and I don't think I'm alone in the desire to not take part in another time wasting wild goose chase.

If the methods you are stating did not personally help you feel qi/energy (especially for the first time, as these things "work" more easily after once they work the first time) then they likely won't work for anybody else either, it's more like a game of luck and trial testing random methods at that point, the few that get lucky and succeed will call this thread amazing but the majority will just end up wasting time without a clear outline and a deadline to know when to stop to move onto the next method.

Thank you

Oof this will be long

> Which of these methods (or maybe it was one you didn't list) allowed you to feel qi/energy for the first time?

Alright lets first go on what I didn't list, on the daoist/taoist torrent file I posted there is a video completion (around 5 hours long) demystifying and teaching the essence of qigong (which in of itself is not a very good term as it generalises way to much Chinese traditions). It is Andrew Nugent-Heads tutorial, his demystifying section was amazing I'm surprised he got so much right, although I more practical work is harder to follow as a lot of the stuff he did was with a partner. Overall I would recommend (if you're looking for a legit western source) to look at his works and who he affiliate with. Honestly one of the most honest westerns I have seen when relating to subjects such as this.

> 2. How long did you have to train in that method (months or weeks) and how consistently (30 mins per day or 1 hour per day)?

Well depends what you want to practice, with you want to conjure fire or electricity like John Chang then 10s of 20s of years.

If you want just the health benefits and a solid foundation I would recommend like 30 so minutes of hatha yoga/mediation every day; if you do that you will start to naturally get more mental clarity, lower blood pressure, etc. If you have more time, I will would recommend reading the sources I gave you and then learn the more advised time extensive practices

> 3. What was foreign & distinct enough about that energetic experience that you knew that it worked and you felt qi/energy for the first time (it would have to be distinct from the usual sensations you already can feel when you focus or else you could very well just be falling for a placebo)?

(You would learn this one andrews videos if I remember correctly (also he is on YouTube and has some books relating to this subject)) If you really want to feel something distinct then a kundalini awakening (I have all the sources up there) would be something up your ally but you don't really seem that interested in that.

> I've tried a good few methods, nothing really worked, and I don't think I'm alone in the desire to not take part in another time wasting wild goose chase

Completely understand there is a lot of new age bullshit rn which is shitting up the whole sphere so I understand where you're coming from. But their are countless reports of health benefits and validation of these claims just look at John Chang and his disciples you would think that if John Chang was bullshitting then he wouldn't be as eager to help people trying to discredit his work additionally he has had 100s of clients which have healed form his acupuncture work and all his disciples which have been with him for years never once call bullshit and make books on his work (I posted it here) although they are only giving pretty surface level information as it's traditional not to spread all the secrets to the public.

then they likely won't work for anybody else either, it's more like a game of luck and trial testing random methods at that point, the few that get lucky and succeed

Kinda yes, like many thing you are either born with it or your not, (only like 8/10 people would be able to experience something) it's just that some people are wired differently.

To finsh this off I think your looking at it in the wrong way; people can spend months not feeling any sensation whatsoever and their fine with that as the whole point of this isn't just to feel but rather just another way of life. If you come into this like

>I need to feel something! I need to feel something!

Then I'm sorry to say but you will be extremely disappointed.

,I hope this helped

(Also sorry if there are spelling mistakes in here, I'm on my phone)

The image is a black and white line drawing of two hands holding a rectangular object. The hands are positioned in a way that suggests they are supporting or cradling the object. The object itself appears to be a piece of paper or a small book, with a grid-like pattern on its surface. The lines are thin and evenly spaced, indicating a precise and careful construction. The background is plain and white, which contrasts with the black lines of the drawing, making the hands and object the focal point of the image. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the drawing is simple and clear, with a focus on the hands and the object they are holding.

Also if you're really curious to feel a sensation then I have something I made myself.

What you need to do is place your hands out like the image i posted and your fingers aligned, the. I would want you to move your hands back and forth is a slow motion (slowing down when you fingers as close together (make sure they don't touch)), keep doing this and slowly increase your distance every time you do it. You will start to feel a replication or force between your fingers, when this is force is easily identified you can run your fingers across (again not touching) each other and you will start to feel bumps on where the fingers force are.

I have done this with multiple time and have tested this with my friends with positive results

Hoang was highly autistic -- capable of some basic life skills, but unable to drive and needed a guardian for life. His parents immediately contacted police, but a search proved fruitless. Several months later, in June 2025, Hoang was spotted on a security camera outside a home in Kirkland, Washington -- more than 40 miles from Arlington. Interestingly, he appeared to be inspecting a house with an address similar to his own. He has not been seen since.

On August 31st, 2004, a man was found naked, sunburned, injured, and covered in ant bites next to a dumpster behind a Burger King in Richmond Hill, Georgia. The man could not remember anything about himself except for his birthday, which he was confident was exactly ten years before that of legendary pop singer Michael Jackson. He chose the name Benjamin Kyle, and for eleven years, he struggled to live without a driver's license, passport, or social security card. In late 2015, however, genetic testing discovered his true identity: William Powell of Lafayette, Indiana. He was reunited with some family members and has since been receiving public assistance, however the decades leading up to his discovery in 2004 will likely never be known.

August 5th, 1993: Seven people went on a hiking trip in the Khamar-Daban mountain range in Russia. After beginning their descent, one of the hikers began to scream, while blood seeped from his ears and eyes. A fellow hiker went to help him, but soon began screaming and showing the same symptoms. Another, apparently unable to breathe, bashed her skull against a rock until she was dead. Two more died after vomiting blood, and the final death occurred as a victim was attempting to flee. Only one person survived.

Theories range from altitude sickness, poisonous plants, secret military experiments, and beyond. Yet to this day, none have been solidly proven.

>The paraquat murders (パラコート連続毒殺事件, Parakōto renzoku dokusatsu jiken) were a series of indiscriminate beverage poisonings carried out in western and central Japan in 1985. The drinks were placed in and around vending machines, where the victim would consume the beverage. All the beverages were poisoned with the herbicide paraquat dichloride, except for one which was poisoned with diquat. The most targeted beverages were the energy drinks Oronamin C and Real Gold. The first known case was on April 30, in Fukuyama. At least 13 people died and 35 became seriously ill, in what is possibly the deadliest product-tampering case in history. Warning labels and leaflets were posted around Tokyo, and on many of the 5.2 million vending machines across Japan. In 1761, five women were returning from collecting sticks near Ventimiglia, in northern Italy. Suddenly one of them cried out and dropped dead. Her companions were shocked by what they saw. Her clothes and shoes were torn into fine shreds and scattered up to six feet around her. There were wounds on her head that exposed the skull; the muscles on her right side had given way exposing her intestines; her sacrum was broken and most internal organs were ruptured or livid; her abdominal region bore many deep and parallel incisions, and the flesh of one hip and thigh was almost carried away, exposing the pubic bone and the broken head of the femur which had been forced from its socket. This horrific event was reported to the French Academy of Sciences by M. Morand, and the Annual Register for that year quotes him as noting that these grievous effects took place with no signs of penetration of the womans clothes, nor was there any blood on the scene, nor any sign of her missing flesh.

>Olsson was visited by doctors who noted that her hair, fingernails, and toenails did not appear to grow. The family reported that Olsson occasionally sat up and "mumble[d] prayers she had learned by rote in childhood".

>In July 1892, Olsson was hospitalized in Oskarshamn, where she was treated with electroconvulsive therapy. On 2 August 1892, she was released from the hospital without awakening or her situation improving. The hospital said that the appropriate diagnosis was "dementia paralytica". However, there is little to suggest that she actually suffered from that illness. She was not re-examined by a doctor until she awoke from her sleep.

...what if we hook her up to a car battery and see what happens? Nah, didn't work, bitch must just be too crazy to move, oh well we tried everything.

>Upon the death of her brother in 1907, Olsson began crying hysterically, although she remained in an assumed coma. She reportedly did not touch any food that she received during her years in bed, and the family's maid never heard her speaking.

>It has been speculated that Olsson may not really have been asleep and hibernating all that time. There were many unexplained characteristics of her state; for example, her hair, fingernails, and toenails did not seem to grow.

>It was later revealed that Olsson did wake up occasionally and, when she did, she reacted with sorrow and anger. Frödeström speculated that Olsson thought that she was seriously ill, and that she remained still with her eyes closed and refused to eat to elicit sympathy. It has been conjectured that her mother had helped her and kept the fact secret that she was no longer hibernating.

hmmmm, the prospect of her faking it for decades is just as crazy as if she was actually fucked up medically.

The case status is followed by a section titled "Case Status" with a heading "UNSOLVED". Below this heading, there is a description of the case, stating that on 5/20/1986, Frances Taylor Shurtlett, her son Lee Shurtlett (age 6) and her nephew, Spencer Roberts (age 6) were visiting Frances's last son, Lee Shurtlett's home in Ogden, Utah. The family was playing in the backyard when they were attacked by a bear. The bear was a 10-year-old black bear, and it was a male. The family was inside the house when the bear was inside the house. The bear was killed by a police officer. The description of the case includes the location of the incident, the type of bear, the size of the bear, the age of the bear, the gender of the bear, the type of clothing the family was wearing, and the last name of the victim.

The image is a screenshot from a webpage, and it is a photograph of a woman's face with a smile, which is not the focus of the image. The image is in black and white, and the woman's face is the only visible part of the image. The rest of the image is a text-based description of the case.

In January of 1947, a young woman by the name of Elizabeth Short was found brutally murdered in Los Angeles. The 22 year old's body had been cleanly severed in half at the waist, and her intestines were neatly tucked under her backside. Her legs had been spread, her elbows bent upwards, and her hands positioned gracefully above her head, not unlike like those of a ballet dancer. Her face had been carved from the corners of her mouth, all the way up to her ears, forming a scar commonly known as a Glasgow smile.

In the decades since, Short has become one of the most famous murder victims in American history. Her murder came less than a year after the release of a famous murder-mystery film starring Alan Ladd, which may well be how Short came to be known as the Black Dahlia.

Her killer has never been identified.

"Mommy is in the trees."

In 1985, Steven Harkins and his girlfriend Ruth Cooper went camping in a remote area of Pierce County, Washington. When they did not return several days later, their families reported them missing, and a search began.

Investigators quickly discovered Harkins' body, with a gunshot wound to the head. His pet dog had also been shot to death. It wouldn't be until several months later that Cooper's body was found, about a mile and a half away, with a tube sock tied around the neck. Her head was about 50 feet away.

Over a month later, a little girl was found wandering, alone, outside of a Kmart in Spanaway, Washington. When asked where her parents were, the young woman simply replied: "Mommy is in the trees."

The girl's face was shown on local television, and her grandmother successfully identified her as Crystal Louise Robertson, age 2. Her parents, Mike Reimer and Diana Robertson had gone camping earlier that day, not far from where Harkins and Cooper went camping.

Reimer's truck was eventually found, along with Robertson's body, half buried in snow, nearby. Just like with Ruth Cooper, a tube sock was tied around her neck.

It wouldn't be for another 25 years before Mike Reimer's skull was found about a mile away, though a cause of death could not be determined.

To this day, no one is sure if the four deaths are connected, or who is behind them. Some have noted that in both cases, there was a significant age gap between the couples.

On an icy Friday in January of 1956, six-year old Susan Cadieux was playing with her older brothers and a friend at a playground not far from her home in London, Ontario. At approximately 7:45 PM, a man approached Susan, and claimed that he had something to give her. He then told the other children that he was meeting with a priest at a church, and that he lived on York Street (although he pointed towards King Street). When Susan had not returned by 8 PM, her brothers told their parents, who then contacted police. By 1:30 AM, around 300 people had joined the search. The following morning, at about 10 AM, Susan's body was found in a nearby warehouse. She had been sexually assaulted, and her cause of death was listed as exposure. It is believed she died less than 3 hours before being found.

Tears were frozen to her face.

Her killer was never apprehended.

There's postulation that the SFK/Staged Drowning phenomenon is an O9A cult ritual. In the corpus of their work there's references to human sacrifice via water.

Some of the survivors reported how it was multiple perpetrators in tandem.

There's also an eerie tie in to Nine Inch Nail's video, Pinion, off of the Broken ep that depicts something akin to an SFK killing. Some of the victims were found with water in the lungs from different bodies of water.

This video was directed by Peter Christopherson of Coil, another very occult band with ties not only to pedo shit in SEA but also the upper echelons of British society.

I highly recommend checking out William Ramsey's work on the subject.

This giggling soon turned to roaring laughter, which affected almost half of all students at the school. The laughter, which is said to have been occasionally accompanied by pain, rashes, trouble breathing, crying, and even fainting, eventually spread to the entire village and some of the surrounding areas.

A cause of the incident was never determined, though some believe it may have been related to stress or mental health. It would be about 18 months before the laughter finally subsided.

In 1912, eight people were found dead in a home in Iowa. They had all been brutally bludgeoned to death with an axe. Despite a long investigation with several suspects, no one was ever charged.

(this one is NOT for the faint of heart btw)

On February 28, 1983, a pair of looters entered an abandoned apartment building in St. Louis, Missouri. Upon lighting up a cigarette in the darkness, the two criminals were shocked to discover the headless body of a young girl, her hands bound with rope, and wearing only a yellow sweater. She had been raped.

To this day, St. Louis Jane Doe has not been identified. A crucial piece of evidence, the sweater she was found wearing, was lost after detectives mailed it to a psychic in Florida. The case has since gone cold.

Her head was never found.

I found the original unsolved mysteries to be a bit slow for my taste but if you're attention span isn't fucked up like mine, it's nice slow burn

The First 48 is great, it's real footage sometimes you see crazy shit like a body being dragged out of the river, sometimes they don't even bother censoring shit, it's wild.

There's a show with William Shatner with like 6 seasons that goes through a bunch of mysteries, forget the name though.

For my contribution to the thread:

>Resurrection Mary is Chicago's most famous hitchhiking ghost, a spectral blonde woman in a white dress who appears on Archer Avenue, requests a ride, and vanishes after asking to be taken to Resurrection Cemetery, where she is believed to be buried, often linked to a 1930s car crash victim, though her true identity remains a mystery, making her a cultural legend and cautionary tale.

Also at some point people heard screaming by cemetery and this image was the result, something burned the bars and twisted them. They claimed it was a car accident.

>it's fucking comfy, same reason as you >you can see old psyops on there. Narratives they pushed and how they were pushing them back then. Makes things easier to spot and can be pretty hilariously clumsy, considering even just how they narrative push here these days >they unironically ran segments which actually questioned official government narratives at the time. Lots of those questions revolved around military activity, even outside the general UFO stuff. A lot of the stories would not be able to be run on a streaming service today. There are just too many questions they don't like being asked.

Seconding all of these sentiments. Most of these are pre 9/11 and post fall of USSR. It was the golden age of reexamining the actions of our government from 1945-2000. The Cold War was "won" and the wave of patriotism and nationalism that came from the horror of 9/11 hadn't happened yet. People started questioning whether some of these atrocities and coverups were really worth it. They didn't have the Soviet boogie man with his finger hovering over the big red button to scare them to sleep every night. X-Files airing during the same time frame deals with a lot of this stuff as well, especially if you're already initiated and have some context going into it. A lot of soft disclosure stuff going on. Final frame of the first season of X-Files btw. They hold on this for like 10 seconds.

God made it known for our edification:

> 16 Surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter's clay: for shall the work say of him that made it, He made me not? or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, He had no understanding?

We are all sinners. Repentance and accepting Jesus Christ as lord is your salvation. The path is right in front of you but you can't see it because your eyes are not open. Choose what you know in your heart is true.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a man in a military uniform. The man is wearing a peaked cap with a decorative band and a white shirt with a high collar. He has a mustache and is looking directly at the camera. In his right hand, he holds a rifle with a bayonet attached. The background is indistinct, but it appears to be a wall or a plain. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the photograph is reminiscent of historical military portraits, suggesting that it may be a historical or commemorative image.

The image is a composite of two separate photographs. On the left, there is a blurred image of a person in a hallway, with a red circle around the person's head, suggesting a focus on the person's head. The person appears to be in motion, possibly running or walking. The background is indistinct, but it seems to be an indoor setting with a tiled floor.

On the right, there is a photograph of a person's face, which is cropped out of the frame. The person has blonde hair and is looking directly at the camera. The background is blurred, but it appears to be an indoor setting with a window and a person walking by. The person's face is not visible in the photograph.

The style of the image is a mix of a still image and a video, with the blurred image of the person in the hallway serving as a visual clue to the motion of the person in the video. The cropped face in the right image is a still image, but it is not clear what the person is looking at or what the person is doing. The overall style of the image is a blend of still and moving images, with the blurred image of the person in the hallway serving as a visual clue to the motion of the person in the video.

30 year old Kayelyn Louder disappeared near her apartment in Murray, Utah, on September 27th, 2014. She had made several strange 911 calls in the hours before her disappearance, claiming that someone had entered her apartment (her roommate, who was home at the time of one of the calls, claims that no one was inside and the door was locked). She was last seen on surveillance video with her dog near a creek, right outside her apartment building. Several months later, her body was found in a river about 5 miles from where she was last seen. The autopsy was inconclusive, and no one knows how she died.

The image is a black and white photograph showing a security camera feed from a surveillance camera. The camera is mounted on a fence, and the view is from the side of the camera, looking towards the street. The street is lined with a brick wall on the left and a grassy area on the right. In the foreground, there is a black metal fence with a gate. Through the gate, a person is visible, standing on the sidewalk and looking towards the camera. The person appears to be wearing a white shirt and dark pants. The date and time stamp on the image indicates that it was recorded on January 24, 2006, at 13:00:27. The image is a photograph of a handwritten note on a piece of lined paper. The note is written in black ink on a white background. The text is in a casual, handwritten style, with the words appearing to be in a different handwriting style than the rest of the text. The note reads:

"This is tantamount to my insensitivity/unity to people, especially women. I will admit the others when you catch me if you can!
Free-way Chaudhuri"

The handwriting is not clear enough to read the rest of the note, but the message is clear and the style of handwriting suggests it is a personal note. The note is placed on the paper with a crease, indicating it was likely written on a piece of paper and then folded or placed in a folder. The style of the note is informal and personal, suggesting it might be a note from a student or a person expressing a personal opinion or concern. The handwriting is not very legible, and the note does not contain any other visible text or images. The overall impression is of a handwritten note that is personal and possibly intended for a specific recipient.

Not really the same kind of mystery as most of the other stories in this thread but something weird happened in my neighborhood about 10 years ago. I may get small details wrong but this is basically what happened.

Dogs in my neighborhood were going missing at a very unusual rate and I think several dogs were found dead. People would let their dogs out at night and they would disappear. There was an investigation and they couldn't find a person that had done this to the dogs. But they did find very large cat prints in the mud and dirt at a few of the sites. Much bigger than a house cat. And this in the southern usa where we dont have mountain lions or bobcats or anything.

If I find the news article online I'll post it here but this was probably more than 10 years ago so I may not be able to find it. Not really disturbing but a mystery I guess

This kind of reminds me of an oddity from my neighborhood growing up. This went on for a few years starting when I was in middle school. Our doorbell rang one day and my dad answered. It's a guy we'd never seen before who introduced himself as Ira. He was tall, otherwise lean but with a beer belly. Here was mostly bald except for a stringy blonde mustache that covered his mouth and a few stray hairs right on the top of his head. The strangest thing about his appearance was a black patch of fabric on the very back of his head. It didn't look like a bandage. My brother used to joke that it was Velcro and that's sort of what it looked like. Ira handed my dad a flyer about his missing cat, and it looked like any old missing cat flyer you might have seen. But then Ira said "I'm looking for my cat, but any cat would do." That activated my dad's weirdo radar and my dad sent him away.

As I said before, we'd never seen him before but after that we started seeing him everyday walking up and down our street. He always wore the same clothes and had the same patch of fabric on the back of his head. As he walked by he'd check under cars and occasionally look inside trash cans. That wouldn't be too weird if he was really just looking for his missing cat. The really weird thing is that he continued to do this everyday, regardless of the weather for years. Same outfit too, even in the cold. The initial meeting occurred the summer before 9/11 when I was about to start the eighth grade and, while I can't pinpoint the exact time this stopped, my best friend once saw him with me and we met when I was in sophomore year of high school. The guy always gave me "Men in Black pretending to be human" vibes, though I never seriously considered any sort of paranormal origins.

We are waiting for forensic analysis to tell us if this is a murder case or mass suicide. Also the weapon of murder. Keep in mind that all three victims were found with gunshots in the temple and with several weapons near their dead bodies. All this while someone set the hut ablaze.

The prime suspect is Ivaylo Kalushev who was owner of the hut and leader of the militia. Really strange bird. He has a company that organizes scout training for young kids from 1992 till this very moment. Over 3000 kids were educated through his camps on wildlife and nature stuff. The moto of his company is "Spiritual Enlightenment through Nature" He is also fan of Oriental religions, specifically bhudism. Calls himslef Ivo Lama (whatever that means). Supposedly he has a spelunking company in Mexico and has been living in Mexico for several month prior to murders. The police is looking after him.

There are literally dozens of theories about this case. From drug deal gone wrong, to refugess transportation hub (Serbia border is 15 km to the West), to depot for illegal weapons to Ukraine, to milking government and EU money for "environmental protection"....to strange cult that includes orgies with kids, to mass suicide cult, to some new kind of sect that no one knows about.

Really no one knows and all is speculations at this point. We will have forensic analysis some time tomorrow or near the end of the week that will tell us more.

The text in the image provides a historical context for the sketches. It mentions that the sketches were based on eyewitness accounts by Chris Chan, who was a police officer in 2000s. The text also states that the sketches were based on the Zodiac, a type of police glasses that the Zodiac was seen wearing.

I remember when this happened and the mass hysteria that followed. This would probably be solved by video surveillance today but there were not many cameras watching back then. they still don' know if the poison was put in the bottles at the factory or if the product was taken from the shelves, tampered with and returned to the shelves. Anyhow, Tylenol is really bad for you and can destroy your liver so avoid this crap.

Masatoshi Hayashi was a promising student in the late 1990s with a bright future ahead of him. Until one night, however, he did not return home after studying. Two days later, his car was discovered in the city of Gifu, about 100 miles from his home. His wallet and laptop were still inside, and there was a message written on the laptop which seems to imply an attempt to disappear intentionally. The police and Hayashi's family, however, noticed that the style of writing was unlike Hayashi's own, and it was very likely that the message was written by someone else. He has never been found, though some believe he may have been kidnapped by North Korean agents.

>The Wall Street bombing was an act of terrorism on Wall Street at 12:01 pm on Thursday, September 16, 1920. The blast killed 30 people immediately, and another eight later died of wounds that they sustained in the blast. There were 143 seriously injured, and the total number of injured was in the hundreds.[2]:160–61[3]

The bombing was never solved, although investigators and historians believe it was carried out by Galleanists, a group responsible for a series of bombings the previous year.

Being lost in the dark is pretty stressful and make people to do dumb things, specially if you are in a jungle without a tent. Also I think they took those pics at night not only as a source of light, but also to try and call for help. There are many sounds in the jungle at night and they could mistake those for people or even predators.

Springfield 3

On June 7, 1992, in Springfield, Missouri, three women vanished from a home without a trace. No one's ever found them. No one knows what really happened. To this day, it's one of the most baffling missing persons cases in American history.

The women were:

Sherrill Levitt (47) – a hairdresser and mother.

Suzanne “Suzie” Streeter (19) – Sherrill's daughter.

Stacy McCall (18) – Suzie's friend, just graduated high school with her.

That night, Suzie and Stacy had just graduated. They went to a few parties and then planned to crash at a friend's house. But that place was too crowded, so they ended up deciding to spend the night at Suzie's place instead. Suzie lived with her mom, Sherrill, in a small house at 1717 East Delmar Street.

And that's where things get weird.

The next morning, around 9 a.m., friends started showing up at the house. Suzie and Stacy were supposed to meet up with friends to go to a water park. When they didn't show, people went looking. They found the front door unlocked, the women's purses all lined up inside, makeup still out, cigarettes untouched. The dog (a little Yorkie) was there and seemed anxious. The porch light globe was shattered, but no sign of forced entry.

Their cars were all there. It looked like they'd just vanished. One of the friends even picked up the house phone and accidentally deleted a strange message on the answering machine. Police later said that message might have been important, but it was gone.

No struggle. No sign of anything violent happening in the house. All three vanished at once. Suzie, Stacy, and Sherrill just gone. No one heard anything. No neighbors reported anything unusual.

The image is a satellite image of a large, rectangular building with a red roof and a white wall. The building is surrounded by a dense forest of trees, with the forest appearing to be a mix of deciduous and coniferous trees. The building is situated on a slight elevation, and the surrounding area is relatively flat. There are no visible roads or pathways leading to the building, and the surrounding forest appears to be undisturbed. The image is taken from an aerial perspective, providing a bird's eye view of the building and the forest. There are no visible texts or distinctive markings on the building or the surrounding area. The style of the image is a standard aerial photograph, with a focus on the building and the natural environment.

More on the Bulgarian double Triple Murder Case:

Leaked info from investigaton is as follows:

The three men killed in Petrohan hut were kneeling one next to another and were shot systematically in their temples. No sights of struggle or inability to move founded. It is yet to be discovered if one of the three killed the other and then killed himself, all of them killed themselves or someone killed them one by one. The 2 dogs of the hut were also shot.

About todays other Triple murder:

Three more dead bodies were found near one of Stara planina peaks in a camp car. Supposedly the driver (yet to be confirmed) is the prime suspect and leader of the cult and owner of the hut - Ivaylo Kalushev (Ivo Lama). The other two are 15 years old boy and 22 year old man. They were shot again one by one without signs of struggle. Then the driver killed himself.

The main version of the police is that this organisation was some sort of sect that recruited boys from age 10 to 15 to be "trained". What is this sect, what were they teaching, what were they doing, what were their believes, how come rich parents leave their children to be trained by this Ivo Lama for months is yet to be discovered.

The whole case is dubbed "Bulgarian Real Life Twin Peaks", "Petrohan Mystery" or the "Hut of Horrors".

It was a sect.

Today our authorities gave briefing about murders. All of the dead were members of this sect and they killed each other with shot in the head. Three of them in Petrohan hut, three in a camp car near Okoltchitsa peak in Stara planina. They set the hut on fire before killing themselves. All of them follow blindly their leader Ivaylo Kalushev (aka Ivo Lama). The sect have at least two rooms with buddhist stuff where they practice "religious rituals" several hours a day.

I will post a link to the press conference but can't make a subtitle. If someone can or have an app to translate it, would be awesome.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=I8Hjao61krA>

Later will post the short videos from security cameras outside the hut, showing the members of the sect saying farewell each other, a room with religious stuff and how they set the hut on fire.

The investigation continues

I remember watching the "One Lunatic One Icepick" video and he refused to give the name of the killer for pseudomoral reasons, his loquendo avatar is bad as well. Nexpo also sucks, omitting information to make a more sensationalistic recount at the expense of the facts, which is a shame because his edition is great. All these channels are not that far away from being a feature length Tik Tok, I can't find a single one that doesn't start cutting corners and focus

The image is a screenshot of a text-based discussion on a forum. The text is in a language that appears to be Russian, and it is written in a mix of Cyrillic and Latin characters. The discussion is about a deer, specifically a white-tailed deer, and the text is discussing the size of the deer, its habitat, and the hunting season. The image shows a deer standing in a field with a snowy landscape in the background. The deer is depicted in a silhouette style, with its body and head visible, and it is standing on all four legs. The deer is facing to the right and appears to be looking at something in the distance. The image is a composite of several photographs, each showing a different aspect of the deer, such as its head, body, and legs. The photographs are taken from different angles and distances, providing a comprehensive view of the deer. The background of the image is a snowy landscape with a few trees and a clear sky. The overall style of the image is realistic and detailed, capturing the essence of the deer in its natural habitat.

The first picture is a Facial composite by a face witness in the case of Madeleine McCann (Maddie). Three days after Madeleine disappeared in early May 2007, the woman in the drawing asked a witness strange questions about a girl: "Are you here to deliver my new daughter? Have you got her? Have you got the child?"

Allegedly they have very recently found out the key to the 340 or 408 one. Apparently it was keyed with the misspelled "paradice" that he used over and over again in his plaintext letter he gave alongside them. I think the first one that was solved was also solved with a key hidden in his English letter too, which makes me wonder if the other 2 have the keys in their letters too. Specifically the "cureos" word he misspelled.

Remember, this guy was NOT retarded, and made one of the most complex ciphers ever as well as complex bombs. Most people who can do that would probably misspell certain words on purpose specifically as a clue

The image is a black and white illustration depicting a man in a dynamic pose, seemingly in motion. He is leaning forward with his arms extended, gripping a wooden handhold. His face is obscured by a hat, and he appears to be in a state of exertion, with sweat visible on his forehead. The man is wearing a jacket and trousers, and his posture suggests he is exerting himself to climb a steep incline.

The background shows a snowy landscape with a building and a railway track, suggesting an outdoor setting. The text accompanying the illustration reads, "My fingers grip the handhold, and my feet land on the steps with sharp violence." This suggests that the man is climbing a steep incline, and the text implies a sense of urgency or determination. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of early 20th-century portraiture, with a focus on the action and the intensity of the moment.

Ok so obviously the Illuminati, Cabal, whatever they are, are cleaning house right now. The file releases and everything that will follow them are a way to direct the rage of the cattle towards low-tier liabilities like Epstein and the bushes. The question is: who will occupy the vacant seats? How could a person position himself to be considered for induction? Agartha probably isn't downsizing for good, just cutting off dead weight. There will be a round of hiring. They may be winding Israel down though.

or the Los Angeles Times, as indicated by the mention of "Chicago Tribune" and "Los Angeles Times" in the bottom right corner. The article is titled "Friends: Suspect said she'd get on television," and it discusses a case involving a suspect who allegedly threatened to expose a person's sexual activities on television. The text is dense with information, and the article seems to be a news report, with details about the suspect's actions and the reactions of others.

The image is a scanned newspaper article, and the text is in a standard font, making it easy to read. The layout is typical of a newspaper article, with a headline at the top, followed by a subheading, and then the main body of text. The article is divided into two columns, with the left column containing the headline and subheading, and the right column containing the main body of text. The text is in a language that is not English, suggesting that the article is in a different language, possibly another language from the 1970s, such as French or German.

The image is a scanned document, and the quality of the image is not very good, with some parts of the text appearing blurry or pixelated. The newspaper article is dated from the 1970s, as indicated by the style of the text and the overall appearance of the image. The article is a news report, and the focus is on the events and actions of the suspect and the reactions of others.

Pardon? I'm not sure I understand. Nothing I wrote is meant to be threatening to anyone. My friend your aggression seems excessive. Mind your tongue. Furthermore, people like Bill 1&2 are exactly the kind of people I'm talking about. They keep teasing people with information and building more animosity towards them. Eventually they will be lynched. The power structures will rest easily knowing that their viceroys have been tied up.

Do you know what a viceroy is? A surrogate? That's what Bill Gates is. Nobody with true power would ever endure the hassle of showing his face. Billionaires possess power on behalf of their superiors, and are allowed to play in their little ball pits like the island until the time comes for them too to be sacrificed.

The secret masters buy their slaves with opportunity. Agartha knows the path of shipping futures because they have SEEN the future. They tell Epstein what they see and he becomes a slave, an infant suckling at the teat of prognostication.

The image is a still from a television show, featuring a man in a living room setting. The man is standing with his arms outstretched, appearing to levitate above the floor. He is wearing a gray cardigan and blue jeans. In front of him is a colorful, glowing aura that radiates from his chest, with a series of seven colors: red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet. The aura is surrounded by a circular pattern that resembles a mandala.

The man is positioned in the center of the image, with the living room setting around him. To his left, there is a beige sofa with two orange throw pillows. To his right, there is a wooden coffee table with a white surface. Behind the man, there is a staircase leading to a second floor. On the wall to the left, there is a framed picture. The room has a warm, inviting atmosphere.

What most want out of joining them are securities and comforts, yet deem their leaders evil for treating some pawns like disposable assets. They, like money or objects, should be a means to an end not a pursuit: your goals in this world shouldn't need elite sponsorship to succeed and if you want their attention you should already be building an empire of influence or power in your chosen field to attract them. [9 / 3]The image is a digital graphic with a clean, minimalist design. It features two main sections: the top section is a title in bold, black text that reads "String" in the center, and below it, there is a subtitle in smaller, black text that reads "Data Structure." The background of the image is white, and the text is black, creating a contrast that makes the text stand out.

The top section of the image contains a green logo with the text "ege" in a smaller font size, positioned to the left of the title. The logo is a stylized representation of a leaf, which is a common symbol for ege, a company that likely specializes in web development or related fields.

The bottom section of the image is a diagrammatic representation of a string data structure. It consists of a series of black lines, each representing a character in the string. The lines are numbered from 0 to 5, with the number 0 at the beginning and the number 5 at the end, indicating the end of the string. The lines are connected in a way that suggests they form a string, with the characters "Geek" at the beginning and "Geek" at the end, forming the string "Geek". The diagram is labeled with the index "0" and the string "Geek" in a smaller font size, indicating the starting and ending positions of the string.

The overall style of the image is informational and educational, likely intended to provide a clear and concise explanation of a string data structure. The use of a simple, clean design with a focus on text and symbols makes the information easy to understand.

We're in a simulation. To be more specific, we're inside a recursive rendering function, and the base case is at the Planck length. That's where the strings get rendered.

They're just text. One dimensional lines of text. The strings are passed into the function at the level of base reality.

Unfortunately to read the text we would need a particle accelerator the size of the Milky Way.

Anonymous Thu 05 Feb 2026 14:02:28 No.41920483 Report

>>41920237

So you're saying that reality can be modeled as a recursive informational process rather than as fundamentally material. At the smallest scale (near the Planck length), reality consists of primitive informational structures analogous to syntax without meaning.

These primitives are real but impossible for embedded observers to directly interpret due to physical and computational limits. Through recursive aggregation, higher-order structures—matter, spacetime, life, and mind—emerge as meaningful interpretations of this base information.

You're saying the universe is not **literally** text or a simulation run by an external agent, but that it behaves as if it is continuously rendering itself from information?

interdimensional energy probes (strings) push through between two membranes, when the probes meet they emit light and sound then immediately disperse as a circuit discharge - this is the quantum foam.

if the string builds up charge it develops into a spinor and develops an electron shell navigating the foam through qed qcd.

is that really so hard? electromagnetism at scale is the same as at the quantum. look at how lightning travels up/down. charged pathways are like narrative lines for the others to flow, the end points are archetypes that guide the sparks.

The image is a black and white illustration that depicts a scene of a person hanging from a tree. The person appears to be in a state of distress, with their head and arms hanging downward, suggesting they are in a precarious position. The tree has a twisted trunk and branches, and the sky above is filled with swirling patterns, possibly indicating a storm or other atmospheric disturbances.

In the background, there is a body of water with a bird flying over it, adding to the sense of isolation or distress. The text at the bottom of the image reads "Ollin on the Yggdrasil, the World Tree, Spies the Runes," which suggests that the scene is a symbolic representation of the concept of the world tree, the Yggdrasil, and the runes, which are ancient Norse symbols.

The style of the illustration is reminiscent of traditional or folk art, with a focus on line and shading to create depth and texture. The overall mood conveyed by the image is one of tension and mystery, with the person's position and the surrounding elements suggesting a narrative or symbolic meaning.

The image is a split-screen comparison of two different scenes from the Star Wars franchise. On the left side, we see a character with long, wavy hair and a beard, wearing a brown robe. He is pointing his index finger towards the viewer, and his expression is serious. The background is blurred, but it appears to be a garden or outdoor setting with some greenery and flowers.

On the right side, the same character is shown in a different pose. He is holding a gun in his right hand, aiming it towards the viewer. His expression is intense, and he is looking directly at the camera. The background is also blurred, but it seems to be a dimly lit, possibly nighttime scene with a warm, orange glow.

There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is a digital composite, likely created for a fan or promotional purpose, combining the two scenes from the Star Wars movies.

>explain what they are and how they for example differ from magical abilities

To say it very simplified: magic is seen as the knowledge to summon spirits, demons, gods and such. The magician himself has no supernatural powers, he gets them from the being he summons. And that usually has a price.

Siddhis are supernatural abilities that a yogin develops through meditation, yoga, tantra and such. He learns to control prana and shakti. It's his power, he doesn't need spirits and gods.

The crystal is cut into a triangular shape with sharp, jagged edges, and it has a translucent appearance with a greenish tint. The background is blurred, suggesting a focus on the crystal itself. The lighting in the image is soft, with a greenish hue that complements the color of the crystal. There are no visible texts or other discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is a close-up photograph with a focus on the texture and color of the crystal.

The image depicts a bustling street scene in what appears to be a densely populated urban area. The street is lined with a variety of buildings, some of which are covered in numerous posters and advertisements, creating a colorful and cluttered backdrop. The perspective of the photo is from a low angle, looking upwards towards the buildings, which gives a sense of the height and density of the structures.

In the foreground, there are several individuals walking along the street, some of whom are carrying bags or wearing backpacks. The street is filled with various objects, including boxes and other items that are not clearly visible due to the angle and distance. The overall atmosphere of the image is one of a busy, urban environment, with the street teeming with activity. There are no discernible texts or distinctive features that can be identified. The image is a candid snapshot of daily life in a city, capturing the movement and energy of the street.

yang practices are active things. stillness is the yin side.

so lower dantien breathing, kundalini yoga, six yogas of naropa...just examples, these are all active things active things must be balanced, a good balance of yin and yang will produce the highest amplitudes while breathwork is active, mastering it leads to high efficiency stillness where the fruits of the active practices are more readily absorbed doing the active stuff without the stillness is a recipe for harm

yang practices don't cultivate much yin

but when yin is well cultivated...what we see happen is that yang easily rises to match the level of yin so by cultivating the yin side, the yang side automatically rises too

Guess I'm doing more answers on Hinduism

>>41920824

Kind of, yeah. It's not strictly your spinal cord though.

You're referring also to two things here. Both of which are counted under siddhi;

1. Boons (blessings/gifts from gods)

2. Latent powers (siddhis the average joe with enough effort, time and karma can obtain)

>>41920847

Practice traditional yoga. Meditation, ritual, prayer/mantra chanting.
Helps also to have body awareness.

As other anons said, the key is "stillness." If you're wondering what the hell that means, let's break it down.

Normally your mind is going between dozens of different things throughout the day, often without you even noticing. If you're a very unstilled type of person, you may even do things such as constantly play videos or noises in the background of your environment.

If our mind is normally like a chaotic swirl and crash of thoughts/sensations/emotions, meditation "stills" the mind into being like a tranquil lake. It becomes deep, subtle, reflective. Instead of being constantly scattered, now your mind is unified.

That is "samadhi". The result of meditation, unification of mind. Stillness.

Anonymous Fri 06 Feb 2026 08:16:35 No.41924467 Report

Quoted By: >>41925681

>>41924460

Now, there are also different practices which can help to bring about siddhis, even specific ones, much faster than the common route.

Deity worship is associated with the granting of Boons & realization of siddhi.

Mantras have specific siddhis associated with them most of the time and constitute an entire form of practice on their own.

Pranayama also causes siddhi when properly cultivated. (Don't overdo and agitate the mind. )

Simple as that.

not quite samadhi, but all the things you wrote well describe mastering stillness which culminates into a great stillness where all phenomena drop away but that also is not samadhi, that's just the culmination of the prerequisites samadhi is the arising of the spiritual light brilliant and unambiguous

one should not take this spark to mean he's enlightened but merely that he's attained the primary prerequisite for enlightenment

In Mopai there is 4 level documented and 72 level unknown, those 72 level are reference to the Tower of Babylon (or Shiva), then there is the ultimate level 42 and I think it describe the Da'ath sefirot.

Yoga is a spiritual discipline or paths of self-realization, there's 4 different yoga, bhakti (devotion/emotion), gnana (intelligence/knowledge/philosophy), karma (selfless actions) and kriya (internal action, breath work and energies).

Tantra, means technique/technology and is basically an advanced esoteric form of yoga, using mantra, meditation, visualization, internal energies, spirits/gods etc. to achieve direct knowledge of the malleable nature of reality.

In christian terms it would be like people singing gospel and dancing in church (bhakti). Deep studying of the bible, like Jews do with their texts (gnana). Volunteer to help the sick and poor (karma). The rosary and praying (kriya).

Tantric Christianity would be like esoteric Christianity, gnosticism and using magic working with angels.

Magic in Christianity is taboo which makes it a left hand path. Used by corrupt people for less noble purposes it becomes black magic.

Someone telling you this is magic-cucking you, which is a big trope in magic settings (it's bled into the modern world, where now we have cuckholdry going mainstream).

Someone convinced you to not experience sexual pleasures so they could farm your energies (sort of like how most of you think loosh works).

It's good you guys are helping people and I admire that. Please keep in mind that Meditation is not strictly necessary. Your main goals are improving Visualization techniques and inner exploration. Yes, the physical vessel is important to nurture, to maintain and control, but your real aim is for genuine Psychological changes, which are largely mental. The body can always be altered and, while Neuroscience and Endocrinology give us great views into how these systems really work, what you're really looking for are physiological responses. Some people require Meditation to perform these feats and others do now.

>hormonal benefits of not masturbating or releasing seed

Yes, you're clearly right that there are benefits and I'm not challenging that. What I'm challenging is that self-mortification is the only or best way to "achieve Siddhis".

First, Siddhis are not confined to Poodia, just like I said. India's whole system is derived from the Brahmans who carried with them MC1R, which you'll find to be incredibly important to these discussions even if you or anyone else desperately prefers we don't bring it up. This notion that Indians therefore own Siddhis or are the sole authority on the subject is fucking laughable.

Next, Siddhis are hereditary. This is not my claim, this is your government's claim. They are looking for specific genetic sequences for an extremely obvious reason and you can choose to believe it's because everyone's a pedophile and the kids are just so super pretty if you really want to, but I'm telling you that's not the reason. The reason is because Siddhis and "National Security" have tremendous overlap. But you're too caught up in Poo Mysticism and not being honest about its inspirations to ever attempt to notice anything like that, now aren't you?

Yes, Siddhis are Hereditary. Siddhis REQUIRE certain genetics. Proceed with your butthurt, by all means.

The image is a digital illustration or animation, depicting a character in a dark, shadowy environment. The character is a humanoid figure with a hooded cloak, and it appears to be a male with a stern expression. The character is holding a staff with a glowing blue aura around it, which suggests a magical or mystical element. The staff emits a bright blue light, and the character's hands are positioned as if they are about to cast a spell or perform a ritual. The background is dark and smoky, with a hint of a structure or building in the distance. The overall mood of the image is dramatic and intense, with the character's focused expression and the glowing staff being the central elements. There are no discernible texts or other objects in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of fantasy or science fiction genres, with a focus on the character and the magical elements.

Okay, that guy is an idiot. The "feeling" is literal "Madness". Most people are overcome by it, but if you have the right traits that govern susceptibility, it's a fairly straightforward process (at least physically). It's more a mental game at that point, where you're constantly swinging between paradoxes, making the mental state rather fragile. The catch is this fragility grants a receptivity that helps tune the Divination process, for a primary example, which is the most common feature most of you are familiar with.

It's really about reliable entry of the "flow state", proper ordering of hormonal centers in the body (which is why they all stress Pranayama incessantly) and making the psyche flexible enough to make use of the mental variables as you spread your knowledgebase and exertions across the various mythological-psychological frameworks.

Glad I could help, fren. Please remember to make fun of people when they say you can just earn a siddhi by not thinking about or enjoying sexual pleasures. Please remind them that Siddhis are hereditary.

Call people who pout about "racism" niggers, please. This is important for all of us to heal.

Now, for those of you about to freak out and complain to your wife's boyfriend, it's important to understand the differences between Siddhis (le magical powers) and basic human features like Precognition/Divination (to a point, let's be honest here), Telepathy or Active Dreaming (or Astral Projection). These things are (re)taught to normalfags because they forget they can do them and all of the means of (re)learning are now sequestered.

There's also a catch to "Siddhis are genetic" - many of us share genetics from the red haired giants that taught all of us about this. This is why we called them "Pollinators".

Yes, that's right, I baited all of you in several waves on purpose. I hope you've been enjoying the game we've been playing.

The image is a medical illustration depicting the anatomy of the human face, focusing on the nasal cavity and sinuses. The illustration is in a side profile view, with the head oriented to the left. The illustration is in a grayscale color scheme with a light background.

At the top of the image, there is a label that reads "Ethmoid sinuses," followed by "Sphenoid sinuses" and "Frontal sinuses" in a smaller font size. Below these, there are three labeled areas: "Opening to osta," "Nasal cavity," and "Maxillary sinuses." Each of these areas is connected by lines that indicate the flow of air and the direction of the sinuses.

The illustration is labeled with the text "Ethmoid sinuses," "Sphenoid sinuses," "Frontal sinuses," "Opening to osta," "Nasal cavity," and "Maxillary sinuses." These labels are in a larger font size compared to the rest of the text, which is in a smaller font size. The labels are positioned at the top of the image, with the "Ethmoid sinuses" label being the largest and the "Maxillary sinuses" label being the smallest.

The illustration is a clear and precise representation of the anatomy of the human face, with a focus on the nasal cavity and sinuses. It is a useful educational tool for understanding the structure of the human face and its function in breathing.

the inhale should begin with diaphragm motion and not any motion from the airways

the diaphragm motion is connected to the perineum motion, this is key to full internal breathing and what is meant by "the external breath disappears"

it most certainly doesnt mean stop breathing, doing that just invites hypoxia along for the ride and then you burn off the extra you're accumulating it means the internals are so well integrated that from an outside observer standpoint, you may not appear to be breathing at all but you most certainly are this is a sort of gateway to more advanced meditative happenings

I see. I was venturing into other functions.

So, to recap, we're not saying "breathe from your throat" because that's an unhelpful starting point. Instead, inhale using diaphragmatic muscles and the perineum (you'll notice this activate when you feel the huge rush, based on my experience). It then seems the focus is on using the right muscular interactions to control the breath.

Do you want to expand a little on the bridge between this base state and the "more advanced meditative happenings"? I was skipping ahead when I mentioned directing awareness around in conjunction with energy work, but this isn't something I can frame linguistically (without ranging into ramblings) yet.

Personally, my frustration with the normalfag systems was they rarely explained the bridging concepts well enough. I quickly got a hold of the base teachings, but then they'd be all ambiguous about the transition methods and concepts and that's when I just scoffed and said fuck this then and went to just do my own thing instead. I'm loosely amicable though and I think this benefits others in the thread so long as you're receptive.

>It then seems the focus is on using the right muscular interactions to control the breath.

the concept of kinesthetic chains applies here too just like it does to swinging a baseball bat or a golf club there are optimal combinations and there are suboptimal combinations optimal combinations, for breathing, are ones that reduce/eliminate turbulence in the airways

we want to avoid any motions that draw air across the olfactory nerves

the 5 senses relate to the 12 cranial nerves they exist in an interlinked dynamic so exciting one inhibits calming others

similarly, calming them all as a matter of focus helps engender stillness

you can think of this neural activity something akin to  $r$  in ohm's law

the senses use up a lot more energy than one might think but without a real and significant alteration in the baseline consumption, its basically impossible to tell this once one can attenuate this consumption for a couple hours each day, then it becomes very noticeable that its directly contributing to the gung built up by meditative cultivation more gung drives longer breaths

built up enough and the spiritual light leaps from the stillness in a most unambiguous way

Always a pleasure, as usual. You know, I appreciate you're one of the few people that some of us can earnestly rely upon. Few people deserve to be viewed as a real teacher, but someone that is entirely absent the additional trappings and reliably permeates wisdoms that transparently avail those involved is frankly inarguable.

I'm sure I speak for plenty of people when I say we appreciate you visiting, anon.

>if you don't use the right muscles in conjunction, it can produce too much noise that hides the signal

I see, so overstimulation of sensory activation overwrites the base framework we want to work from. We overcome this by bypassing sensory stimulation with the breath. Apart from the baseline calmness and receptivity we gain from this, it sort of unlocks or unfurls other aspects (a la "spiritual light") of the Inner Space become available to us.

Longer breaths also means lower cortisol and adrenaline, for some examples. Surely most know by now this can aid the sleep hygiene, help manage stress and more.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character from the Star Wars franchise, specifically from the character Snoke, who is a central figure in the story. Snoke is depicted in a dark, regal pose, with his arms outstretched and his face showing a stern expression. He is wearing a long, flowing robe that reaches down to his feet, and a hood that covers his head. The robe is dark, and the hood is also dark, blending with the darkness of the background.

Snoke's hands are raised, and he is holding a staff with a glowing purple aura around it. The staff is held in a manner that suggests he is in the midst of casting a spell or performing a ritual. The background is dark and features a large, circular window that seems to be part of a spaceship or a similar vessel. The window is illuminated by a purple light, which contrasts with the dark surroundings.

The overall color scheme of the image is predominantly dark, with the exception of the purple aura on the staff and the purple light emanating from the window. The lighting is dramatic, with the glow from the staff and the window casting shadows and highlights on the character and the surrounding environment. The image does not contain any text or additional characters.

The conversation appears to be between two individuals, with the text in a mix of English and what appears to be a non-English language, possibly a script or a language that uses a script-like alphabet.

The conversation is about a change in email accounts and passwords, with the first person suggesting that the second person should change their email account and password to avoid being flagged as a "baby fucker." The second person responds with a list of suggested changes, including adding a "factor" to their email account, backing up their email account, and starting to keep good records between supporting baby fuckers.

The sender's message is in a larger font size compared to the recipient's message, which is a common practice in text messages to indicate the sender's message is more important or urgent. The sender's message is in a darker color, which stands out against the lighter background of the message box, making it easier to read.

The content of the conversation is not fully visible in the image, but it seems to be a discussion about a business or professional matter, as indicated by the mention of "JV Partners," "Legal," and "Google" in the conversation. The sender's message is more detailed and includes a list of names and companies, suggesting that the conversation is related to a business or professional context.

The image does not provide any additional context or background information beyond the text itself. The focus is solely on the conversation between the sender and the recipient, and there are no visual elements or additional information that can be discerned from the image.

The image shows a blue sign with white text and graphics. The sign is mounted on a pole and appears to be outdoors, as there are trees and a sky visible in the background. The text on the sign is in Japanese and reads "Tomb of Christ" in English. Below the main text, there is additional text in Japanese that translates to "Tomb of Christ" in English. The sign features a graphic of two crosses, one on each side of a hill, which is a common symbol associated with Christian religious sites. The style of the image is a straightforward photograph with no additional artistic effects.

The image is a still from a video, featuring a character with a stern expression. The character has dark hair, a mustache, and is wearing a red and white outfit with a white collar. The character's eyes are blue, and the mouth is open, suggesting a moment of intense emotion or speech. The background is a cloudy sky, and there is a text overlay in white font that reads, "Look what they need just to mimic a fraction of our power!" The text is positioned at the bottom of the image, and the character's expression and the text together convey a sense of urgency or challenge. The style of the image is reminiscent of animated or comic book graphics, with a focus on character design and dialogue.

The image is a screenshot of a text message, which appears to be a response to a question or statement. The text is in English and is written in a standard font, with a clear and legible font size. The text is divided into two columns, with the left column containing the main body of the text and the right column containing a disclaimer. The text is in a dark color, which contrasts with the lighter background of the text, making it stand out.

The main body of the text discusses the concept of secret societies and their practices, which involve keeping their bloodlines pure and preserving their power and wealth over generations. The text mentions that these secret societies have control over their necromantic cycle, which involves advanced technology and dark magic. The text also mentions that these societies believe that by keeping their bloodlines pure, they can preserve their power and wealth over the generations.

The right column of the text contains a disclaimer that states, "This response is not based on any factual or scientific evidence and should not be taken as such." The text is in a smaller font size compared to the main body of the text, and it is aligned to the left. The overall style of the image is informational and educational, likely intended to provide a response to a question or statement related to the topic of secret societies and their practices.

The image is a text-based image with a white background and a black border. It contains a message in a yellow font that reads, "Because, although you can't see it, by next April you will see the world become free from tyranny when R2D2 and C3PO are launched. And some of you may not watch from your couch. Military tribunals start in January." The text is centered and appears to be a warning or announcement related to a technological event or development. The style of the image is simple and informational, with a focus on conveying a message.

The image is a screenshot of a text message conversation. The text is in black on a white background, and it appears to be a screenshot from a messaging app. The conversation is between two individuals, with the first person expressing their opinion about a person they believe to be a "fucking idiot." The second person responds with a statement about the person's actions and the consequences of those actions. The text is written in a casual, conversational style, and the conversation seems to be ongoing. There are no visible images or graphics in the image, and the focus is solely on the written text.

-Someone is getting scammed

-The elites are desperate/schizo, i.e.: They have house astrologers. Look no further than Hollywood actors. They try scammy stuff all the time in desperation. Rich and famous try everything from The Secret, to thinking they can shrink themselves to lose weight, with the power of their mind. The image is a graphical representation of a chart titled "US Inflation" with a subtitle "For 150 years, consumer price average slightly declined. After the financial crisis bank & credit grows stronger." The chart is divided into two main sections.

The chart is accompanied by a caption that reads "Estimated % of 30-Year-Olds Who Are Both Married and Homeowners (1950-2025)." The chart is sourced from "www.inflationcharts.com" and is dated "2016." The chart is a visual representation of the inflation rate over time, with the "JUDE" group representing the Jews and the "Nixon Standard" representing the standard of living. The graph shows a clear trend of inflation over the years, with the "Nixon Standard" becoming more prevalent as the years progress.

The image is a digital artwork that appears to be a stylized, pixelated representation of a scene from a movie or television show. It features a character with a large, expressive face, who is shouting or yelling. The character's eyes are wide open, and the mouth is open, suggesting a strong emotion or reaction. The character's hair is dark, and the skin tone is not clearly defined due to the pixelation.

In the background, there is a blurred image of a red car with a character that appears to be a character from the same movie or show, as they share a similar expression and pose. The car is in motion, and the character is looking out of the window, which is not clearly visible due to the blur.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of pixel art, with a focus on the character's expressive face and the motion blur of the car. The colors are muted, with a palette that includes shades of red, black, and gray. The image has a grainy texture, which adds to its pixelated appearance. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image.

yea reddit already doxxed him and explored him, name of "Steve Cheney" of Estimote. From the message you can derive that he's narcissistic, very, like cluster B, and took massive narcissistic insult at being fired. The whole shit about messing with babies and black technology -- and especially having dirt on everyone -- is meant to fuck with their heads; that's why he copied Epstein additionally, to further fuck with their heads. Has nothing to do with Epstein otherwise. He's a narcissist, he's patting himself on the back for being so clever with his little game. He's mailing Estimote leadership (that spurned him) and people important to them (google collab, their VC funders) - to get revenge, harm their reputation, etc. Breaking NDAS and dropping info, again, to make Estimote look bush league and out of control.

I mean, put simply, it'd be like if you dumped a crazy girl and she mails your whole family that you fucked babies, and copies Epstein in there too in order to add some color to the whole thing.

Nothing of note in here if you ask me, it's too schizo, but my diagnosis is cluster B in fact.

The reptilians are the sons of God who bread with the fair daughters of men. Scythians worshipped Artimpasa who was a serpentine entity as their mother. Artimpasa is Lucifer. The reptilians are the Annunaki djinn who reside within Nibiru. Nibiru means crossroads. Nibiru is the the chaos that precedes existence. It is Hades. The Taoists, the Sumerians, the Slavs, the Hermanics, the Greeks all speak of the chaotic abyss in the beginning. This is Hades.

Another theory I have:

Suffering creates a [spiritual] friction energy that can be harvested and put in a container. Probably fuels the fucking farm too.

It's then sold off for profit maybe to cosmic elites. It's an "empowering" energy for evil spirits, or maybe something certain spirits subsist on, or maybe it just feels good; maybe all three idk.

The very act of sacrificial murder directly empowers whatever entity they dedicate it to through the suffering of the victim.

It's all very icky from start to finish.

It would also explain hauntings and demonic fuckery; Evil spirits getting a quick hit for the road or finding a host.

But if a species of testicle torturers came to this planet with the idea testicle torture was a benevolent gesture of peace, would you put up with their frivolous miscommunication? They would recoil, like you pushing them away is an act of unfriendliness and war.

But muh evil is subjective, guy.

The only reason this place has survived as long as it has is because it's remained just out of view. We are living on well-kept secret, a black market planet with unethical weapons testing, unsanctioned experiments, "tourism", etc. Nasty ass dirtball run by even nastier entities. A thieves playground.

However, that could all change very fast.

If this was a sanctioned planet, people wouldn't be tripping over themselves to justify it. It would just be a good planet.

A mule who has only ever known the whip, is the quickest to justify it.

What was stolen from us isn't quantifiable.

They don't genuinely think the existence of vidya, goyslop, sex, and yachts excuses what they did to you, but they've convinced you it did which is arguably more disgusting. That "There is no joy without suffering, demons exist to be a contrast to angels and teach you along side them" horseshit only flies with someone who has never actually lived on a planet with real guides. There wasn't a real guide in sight here, only them; and a planet under true guidance doesn't even have demons lmao.

No advanced being would sign off on that idea; "yeah let's have our angels teach them dependency and apology for evil while our demons teach them to fear and be evil."

Fucking morons lol

It never changes humans just fluctuate from hating and hiding from the occult to obsessing over and partaking in it. The fantasy of a so-called Atlantean or antediluvian world where all anons existed as spirit gods we're trying to get back to is a half-truth carrot on a stick. This world plays a role in the cosmos, its very frequency is a designated part of the whole and it's not a loving high frequency at that, all of that cosmic love bullshit is from us not the world and sure enough it seems all too ready to punish our innocence and naivety. What changes in times like this are our human societies and the ways we meet Malkuth's demands, but those infernal demands never go away and if a society won't match them openly then a hidden society will always rise to the task.

The image is a screenshot from a YouTube video, featuring a humorous meme. At the top of the image, there is a text overlay that reads "CROCO IN A PUB" in bold, white letters against a black background. Below this, there is a subtitle that reads "When Australia Let Crocodiles Drink" in white letters on a red background. The main visual element is a photograph of two men standing in a dimly lit room with a large crocodile lying on the floor. The man on the left is wearing a striped shirt and has a beard, while the man on the right is wearing a light-colored shirt and has a beard. The crocodile is large and appears to be lying on its side, with its head resting on the floor. The room has a dark, possibly industrial feel to it. In the bottom left corner of the image, there is a logo that reads "GatorJake456" in white letters on a black background. The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a focus on the juxtaposition of the crocodile and the men's casual attire.

The image is a stylized cartoon or digital illustration featuring a character with a large, exaggerated head and a wide, toothy grin. The character has a reddish-brown complexion and is wearing a brown hat with a wide brim. The character's eyes are large and have a greenish hue, and the mouth is open, revealing a pink tongue. The character's facial features are exaggerated, with a prominent nose and a wide, open mouth. The character's hair is styled in a messy manner, and the character's skin has a rough texture. The background is a gradient of dark gray, which contrasts with the character's skin tone. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of animated characters from a cartoon or comic book, with a focus on character design and expression.

[9 / 2]The image displays three distinct pieces of jewelry against a white background.

On the left, there is a round pendant with a detailed design featuring a figure holding a shield and a bird. The figure appears to be a warrior or a hero, and the bird is perched on the shield. The design is intricate and appears to be made of a silver-colored metal.

In the center, there is another round pendant with a similar design, but this one features a figure holding a staff and a bird. The bird is perched on the staff, and the figure appears to be a figure of authority or a deity.

On the right, there is a circular coin with a detailed design that includes a figure holding a staff and a bird. The bird is perched on the staff, and the figure seems to be a deity or a figure of power.

The style of the jewelry is reminiscent of ancient or classical designs, suggesting that they may be inspired by historical or mythological themes. The craftsmanship appears to be of a high quality, with attention to detail and a sense of history. The image is a close-up photograph, focusing on the details of the jewelry, and there are no texts or additional elements present.

[53 / 8]The image is a close-up photograph of a dog with a brown and black coat. The dog's eyes are focused directly at the camera, and its ears are perked up, indicating alertness. The dog's fur appears to be of a mix of brown and black, with some white patches. The dog is looking directly at the camera, and its expression is neutral.

In the background, there is a blurred image of a tree with bare branches, suggesting that the photo was taken during the winter season. The tree is located behind the dog, and its branches are devoid of leaves, indicating that it is likely in a colder climate.

The image is taken indoors, as indicated by the window in the background. The window has a frosted glass pane, and the outside light is bright, casting a soft glow on the dog and the tree. The overall lighting in the image is soft and natural, with the dog and the tree being the primary subjects. There are no texts or other discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the dog and the natural elements in the background.

Any x methods for locating a lost animal?

It's been 24 hours and he just disappeared with only one sighting 30 minutes after we started looking.

Spent 4 hours today with a drone operator casing the area with a thermal camera (wooded semi-rural) and no sign of him. The major nearby choke point intersection where every person who lives in the area drives through has signs. Local police and animal control know. Local coffee shops and vets have flyers.

What more can I do I am distraught. How do I pray? If you don't have any suggestions then share a lost pet reunion story pls i have located both missing pets and people this way many times, take that for what you will. heres a quick how-to :

if you have a strong connection with your dog (ie youre a good owner, he loves you, he didn't run away because you're evil) there is a chance you can have a convo with him. make sure you're completely alone, close your eyes and try to "feel" him - picture him in your mind, feel yourself petting his fur, imagine yourself seeing him trotting up to you like nothing happened. it will be hard because you're upset, but try to be as calm and quiet as possible, and breathe evenly while focused on your dog, and only your dog. while you do this. as you begin to feel his "presence", start to speak - either in your head or out loud - directly to him, like he was right next to you or in front of you. be firm, as though you're giving a command, address him by his name, and say "It's time to come home buddy, i'm serious" or something to that effect. tell him you're distraught, and that you love him, and that you can't take the worry, for his sake or yours. if you were mean to him, apologize and promise treats - you will know what language he responds to. whatever you do keep it natural and honest. be confident - when youre speaking, you should have no doubt in your mind that you're speaking only to him - concentrate as you say it a few times, making sure you aren't distracted, only focused on him hearing you.

you will know when the connection is broken and the conversation is over when you don't feel the need to keep speaking, or you remember he is lost and begin to feel worried again. THIS IS THE MOST IMPORTANT STEP SO PAY ATTENTION: you have to let go. trust that the message went through and go about your day as best you can. keep looking for him but do not doubt that he heard you trying to call him telepathically, because any doubt you experience will cause the connection to be refused, and the message will not go through.

best of luck anon, and don't give up hope. it's only been a day, so keep looking and do all you can - he'll turn up if he's meant to.

also, no guarantee it'll work but if you tell me his name and breed i can try to ping him on my end

This. I'm surprised more people don't try to connect to their pets. I used to have conversations with my old dog while I was bored at work, just kind of check in, see what she was up to, how she was feeling. Try to tell her what we were going to eat/do/go see that day after I got home. She'd reciprocate what she was up to, eating, watching a bird out the window, itching to go for a walk etc.

Just sit quietly op, and focus on your dog. You can tap in by feeling for him/her the same way you pick up on its feelings and personality when you're hanging together in person.

Surprisingly no. This dog just disappeared from this plane of existence. It's been almost two fulls days and ive had no sightings other than one 30 minutes after we discovered he was missing.

What we've done:

1. Informed immediate neighbors via text. Were told someone saw him in their driveway and then he ran off. This was after dark.

2. Next day posted signs at entrance to my neighborhood (semi rural) there is tract housing sprawl to one side and wooded five acre semi rural homes on the other side.

3. Large signs and fliers posted to every direction on the main highway intersection leading to this area. Basically nobody lives in this area without travelling through it. Signs on entrances and exits to the neighborhoods and signs on all roads leading from the opposite direction. Posted signs in every coffee shop and vets office in immediate area.

3.hired a guy with a thermal camera drone and we searched the surrounding area very thoroughly. He posted my dogs information to local Facebook groups.

4. Dog is microchipped and has my contact information on his collar.

???? Nothing over two days.

The image is a close-up photograph of a cat wearing a black beanie and a black headset with a microphone attached. The cat's eyes are wide open, and it appears to be looking directly at the camera. The cat's face is partially obscured by the beanie, and the cat's whiskers are visible. The background is blurred, suggesting the focus is on the cat. The image has a grainy texture, which is typical of low-resolution or pixelated images. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is humorous, as it combines a common gaming accessory (headset) with a playful and anthropomorphic interpretation of a cat.

When you pray, be sure to go by the Bible. A big part of praying is necessarily believing in God. You don't have to *believe* believe in God in order to pray, but you have to be open to believing. This is an applicable example, and I'll give it.

If you're lost in the wilderness, you need to be open to believing that a river will lead you home, that navigating by the stars works, and that sending smoke signals will attract other humans.

The same thing applies to bible and to God. So, how do you pray? Be open to believing that God will deliver you your sweet wonderful pet, wherever they is. THEN: Google, "What does the bible say about praying for reunification?" Keep googling. "What does the bible say about praying to find a lost person?" Look for sources like BibleHub, OpenBible, and BibleGateway. You'll see them. They're always at the top.

Then, say the prayer out loud and believe it. Be open to believing that it's working. The same way that you use the stars to get home, or a smoke signal to attract attention, or you follow a river toward civilization, you have to be open to believing that this will work.

God will deliver you your pet. Faith is action. Pray hard. He'll love it. I'm praying for you and yours as well. -Sean

t. Been a dog walker for 13 years and I feel your pain with a full understanding. God bless. You will find your pet.

The image is a screenshot of a Twitter post with a tweet and a visual image. The tweet is written in white text on a dark background, and it reads: "Saint Michael the Archangel, defend us in battle. Be our defense against the wickedness and snares of the Devil. May God rebuke him, we humbly pray, and do thou, O Prince of the heavenly hosts, by the power of God, cast into hell Satan, and all evil spirits, who prey about the world seeking the ruin of souls. Amen."

The visual image accompanying the tweet is a painting of a figure with wings and a halo, who appears to be a saint or a divine being. The figure is depicted in a dynamic pose, with one arm raised and the other holding a staff, suggesting a sense of power or authority. The figure is wearing a blue robe with a red sash, and the background is dark with a sense of drama and intensity. The figure's face is not visible, but the overall impression is one of a powerful and protective figure. The painting style is reminiscent of Renaissance art, with its attention to detail and the use of color. The figure's position and the surrounding elements suggest a narrative of divine intervention or protection.

No, people are trolling because they're evil. Stay reticent, friends. This is a serious matter and issue. Just a good samaritan here, the God type. Help him find his pet. We will. And by the way, this is definitely a board for magick and spirituality, and not so much religion. But...

Praying is magick. All the wizards here will tell you that, and I'm not trying to be hilarious, just honest. Praying is magick. Try it.

Try it. Earnestly. Earnestly believe it. Be open to believing it.

The image is a close-up photograph of a dog with a light-colored coat, possibly a breed like a Samoyed or a similar breed, looking directly at the camera with a neutral expression. The dog's eyes are wide open, and its ears are erect, suggesting alertness. The dog is wearing a green collar with a tag, which is visible in the lower right corner of the image. The background is blurred, but it appears to be a car interior with a reflective surface, possibly a car window, and there are reflections visible on the glass. The lighting in the image is soft, and the overall mood is calm. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image.

OP, I lost my dog once for like a week. It was so stressful, we even called local radio stations. We were losing hope, it was a horrible time. I believe in week 2 someone heard the radio... turns out, she was a nurse so was rarely at home and only in and out to feed her dogs. My dog had decided to jump their 6ft fence and join these other two and he was living it up with his new friends. I got the phonecall while she was at work and she told me to go check and see if it was indeed him. I went to the house, around the corner from ours, looked over this wall and the little bastard was smiling at me as if he was so proud of his new girlfriends. Long story short, he'd been chilling out all along and the lady who found him just assumed he was a neighbours dog visiting from time to time without realising he was missing.

Basically just ask other animals of the same species, in this case a dog, ( idk if it works if you ask a different type of animal) if they've seen your dog, just pet them, talk to them normally, in your own language, nothing special, give them the name, characteristics and something to recognize them easily ( like idk a white spot in the forehead or belly) and just ask them if they can find your dog or if they've seen them, nothing special really, I've heard they come back in 1 day usually

The image is a screenshot of a text message exchange between two individuals. The text is in English and appears to be a part of a conversation. The sender of the message is named Jeffrey E., and the recipient is named Jeffery Epstein. The message is dated "Sun, 23 Jun 2018 21:44:00 +0000."

The content of the message is a response to a previous message from the recipient, which is dated "Sun, 23 Jun 2018 21:44:00 +0000." The sender has sent a response to the recipient's previous message, which is not visible in the image. The text is written in a formal tone, with the sender using a formal salutation and the recipient using a formal response.

The content of the message is not fully visible, but it seems to be a continuation of a discussion about a dinner table scenario involving a Jewish group and a group of people who are not Jewish. The sender seems to be making a joke about the dinner table, and the recipient is responding with a humorous response. The text is not very long, and the content is not detailed enough to provide a full understanding of the conversation.

this happens all the time if you read history, the elites get purged by the almost-elite and then the cycle repeats itself

Maybe the jews not in the know might take pleasure in that, but the jews in the know they know that they're just used as pawns/servitors for the reptilians or whomever are in power. Basically they could've chosen any other race to fulfill the role/carry the task of kapo, and because of this many jews in the know are scared, because they know if they fail their masters their families are on the line/get raped by the beings they're serving.

Good and evil only exist within our mortal realm because language exists. Manipulation can not exist within the collective universe since all is known. Reality as we know it only exists because you and me can communicate it to each other brains.

Manipulation causes fractures, things which are hidden within things, and it is through these fractures (fractals) we are trapped.

Where I one with the collective universe I could go and sit on a stub and quietly pass away to live in the collective universe.

But the mortal realm manipulates the being that is man by disturbing his focus (the current function of the brain (reality)) to keep him trapped in the cycle.

The image is a screenshot of a Twitter post by Benjamin Netanyahu, a former Israeli Prime Minister. The post is in Hebrew and is dated February 6, 2020. The text of the post is as follows:

"Jeffrey Epstein's unusual close relationship with Ehud Barak doesn't suggest Epstein worked for Israel. It proves the opposite.

Stuck on his election loss from over two decades ago, Barak has for years obsessively attempted to undermine Israeli democracy by working with the anti-Zionist radical left in failed attempts to overthrow the elected Israeli government.

Barak's personal fixation led him to engage in activities publicly and behind the scenes to undermine the government of Israel, including fueling mass protest movements, fomenting unrest and feeding false media narratives."

The image is a snapshot of a tweet, which is a common form of social media communication. The text is in English, and the tweet is attributed to Benjamin Netanyahu, as indicated by the "@netanyahu" handle at the top of the tweet. The tweet is a response to a statement by Jeffrey Epstein, who is known for his close relationship with Ehud Barak. The tweet criticizes Barak's actions and suggests that his close relationship with Epstein does not necessarily mean that Epstein worked for Israel. The tweet also mentions the personal fixation of Barak on his election loss and his attempts to undermine the government of Israel.

The image is a graphical representation of a chart titled "US Inflation" with a subtitle "For 150 years, consumer price average slightly declined. After the financial crisis bank & credit grows stronger." The chart is divided into two main sections.

The chart is accompanied by a caption that reads "Estimated % of 30-Year-Olds Who Are Both Married and Homeowners (1950-2025)." The chart is sourced from "www.inflationcharts.com" and is dated "2016." The chart is a visual representation of the inflation rate over time, with the "JUDE" group representing the Jews and the "Nixon Standard" representing the standard of living. The graph shows a clear trend of inflation over the years, with the "Nixon Standard" becoming more prevalent as the years progress.

[17 / 3]The image is a digital illustration with a whimsical and humorous tone. At the top of the image, there is a text overlay in a bold, sans-serif font that reads "Be polite even to hallucinations!" The text is in a contrasting color, making it stand out against the background.

In the center of the image, there is a detailed illustration of a cat. The cat is depicted in a dynamic pose, with its front paws raised as if it's about to jump or catch something. The cat is wearing a top hat and a coat, and it has a surprised expression on its face.

Below the cat, there is a man dressed in a top hat and a coat, holding a cane. The man appears to be in mid-motion, as if he's walking or running. He is also wearing a top hat and a coat, and his expression is one of surprise or shock.

The background of the image features a snowy cityscape with buildings and a street. The buildings have classical architecture, and the street is covered in snow. The overall color palette of the image is muted, with the exception of the bright colors used in the cat's fur and the man's coat.

The style of the image is reminiscent of a vintage or classic illustration, with a focus on the contrast between the whimsical and the serious. The image seems to be a playful take on the idea of politeness, with the cat and the man as the central characters.

The hat is adorned with yellow stars and crescent moons, and the robe has a pattern of blue and yellow stars and crescent moons. The man has a stern expression on his face, with his mouth closed and eyebrows drawn together. He is wearing glasses and has a beard. His hands are clasped together in front of him, and he is standing upright with his feet shoulder-width apart. The background is plain white, emphasizing the figure.

There is a mega link in this thread for a 149gb library. Maybe you should learn to read and stop blowing smoke out of your ass before attacking anons.

For anyone else reading this, i'm willing to reciprocate. My entire collection is too large to post, but i'm willing to learn how to make a torrent (and seed it) and share some things, if others can oblige with the larger /omg/ collection and other solid things i don't have.

>Temple of solomon isn't the same as the larger OMG library

What are you talking about?

The Temple of Solomon the King was absolutely the name of the giant mega library that was maintained in that general for years. Shortly after its final update last year we made a torrent of its complete contents, minus several books on zoroastrianism that anon forgot to include from said final update. It's about 60GB large across thousands of documents.

Which "larger OMG library" are you imagining?

Asked about most practices but the ones I got a strong nod to on your behalf were enochian magic, divination (the method is up to you, see what calls to you the most), reiki/energy healing. Asked about goetia and general work with qlippothic entities and got an strong NO for you.

For divination you can check the /div/ OP, which also has a bunch of books up for download.

For a general introduction to /x/ stuff, see the link I will post below, and download the Beginners folder. Liber Null & Psychonaut is very easy to digest as a first read, but honestly, you can start with anything you're drawn to in that folder.

As for enochian magic... That is not my field, but the old /omg/ mega had a bunch of stuff on it. You can download it via torrenting, the magnet link is here:
<https://controlc.com/f90157e6>

If you don't know how to download a torrent:

<https://www.utorrent.com/web/> client if you are on pc, then open the magnet link on any browser. You can filter the enochian folders if you don't want to download the whole thing.

LibreTorrent app if you are on android, same instructions as above from there on - use the magnet link to download, can filter only the enochian folder if you don't want to download everything and blow up your phone's storage.

I was unaware that Evola wrote on magic, all I knew was his philosophy. And if they're anything alike, he's probably pretty good, but will also lead you down a path you weren't looking for, same one as Savitri Devi and Miguel Serrano.

There used to be an Occultism General, but it died sometime last year.

that's an issue specific to /omg/, not /succgen/. You can still find their library through the torrent but the person who autistically kept the mega alive even though it got dmca'd from time to time (ape of thoth) is gone now, and has been for months. So that link will remain dead. The books are still there though, highly recommend torrenting it.

download the /omg/ library, its a torrent now, no more nice mega link to browse, so just grab it all.

there are other kinds of schizo but i reccomend you start with a casual familiarization with western occultism then from there you can branch to jung and that eras psychology (before neoliberalism won and decided that instead of exploring the mind its better to just make peoples ego more adept at masking their true selves to be better wage slaves) and adopt the psychological model of occultism and from there you can naturally bridge into some pretty wild places like aliens and such if you want.

there are a lot of rabbit holes and no one schizo can ever find them all, so its best to follow your heart, but some things like what i suggested seem to pop up in so many places it would be helpful for any aspiring schizo to become familiar with them.

It takes years. Becoming mentally deranged is a calling or at least a very serious hobby.

90 percent of his opinions about anything east of the Indus was flat-out wrong (confirmed by talking to several Phd's in South Asian studies whose areas of experrise range from socio-economics to specific religious cultural phenomena)

I antagonized a Phd in Judaica because I asked to translate the often posted you're a nigger Hebrew script joke that Ape tried to sell as an old invocation about the HGA. (No. It's still fuckign says you're a nigger, old hebrew or not).

90 percent of his library can be found on libgen.

The original library isn't even his. He downloaded some fuck old soulseek torrent, turned into a mega and started presenting it as his library.

The 10 percent of original content is made of Crowley's first drafts and Cultus Sabbati collectanea that is of interest for serious Sabbatics only.

He is the reason the thread went to shit. He couldn't contain his narcissism and journeyed around 4chan, invading every thread about the occult he could find, turning all the discussion to himself, and angering users by being the ackchually autistic when no one needed and wanted to be corrected.

Ape, in essence, was an attention whore that couldn't stand any opinions that were different to his own across ALL of /x/, hence the tremendous antagonism of the users from the other threads against /omg/.

The ones who think he's some well read user are dazzled by his thesaurus and don't dig deeper and analyze the deeper implications of his posts.

Even his Cultus Sabbati is beyond retarded and mistakes individual trees for the forest - he focuses all sources on tracing the origin of some godform instead of seeing the overall patterns of ritual mechanics: the work of a sperg rather than of an intellectual with high IQ.

And I'm pretty sure he's all that into tantra and Sabbatic skull and blood things due to some very obvious psychopathology and that the whole intellectual pursuit is a cope to keep the real motives hidden away. Essentially, a potential Ted Bundy.

[7 / 2]The image is a candid photograph of a group of people sitting on the ground, seemingly engaged in a communal activity. The central figure is a woman with a large smile, wearing a pink and white polka-dot shirt and a green headscarf. She is positioned in front of a group of people, with a few seated behind her and others standing. The setting appears to be outdoors, with a sandy ground and a natural landscape in the background. The lighting suggests it is either early morning or late afternoon. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the photograph is informal and seems to capture a moment of shared activity or celebration.

The image is a photograph capturing a group of people sitting in a field. The individuals are diverse in their attire and expressions, suggesting a casual, outdoor gathering. The woman in the foreground is wearing a vibrant, patterned skirt and a headscarf, while the woman in the background has a red headscarf and a patterned dress. The woman in the center is wearing a bright orange top and a headscarf, and the woman on the right is wearing a red headscarf and a patterned dress. The background shows a landscape with trees and a few structures, indicating a rural or semi-rural setting. The image is taken from a slightly elevated angle, providing a comprehensive view of the group. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the photograph is candid and appears to be taken during the day.

The image is labeled with the text "Microwave antennas" and "Focused microwave fields," indicating that the image is likely a medical or scientific illustration, possibly depicting the function of microwave antennas in the brain. The overall style of the image is a medical or scientific illustration, with a focus on the human brain and the use of microwave antennas.

The image is a stylized cartoon illustration featuring a character that resembles a green frog with a human-like face. The frog is depicted with a closed mouth and a frown, giving the impression of deep thought or contemplation. The character's eyes are wide open, and the eyebrows are raised, suggesting a moment of intense focus or thought. The character's head is tilted slightly to the left, and the head is adorned with a green hat that has a brown brim. The character's body is colored in a vibrant green, and it is wearing a blue shirt. The background of the image is a blurred, indistinct white space, which contrasts with the sharp details of the character. There are no texts present in the image. The style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the character's facial expression and the way it is drawn.

>Right amygdala is primarily associated with negative emotions, especially fear and anxiety, and plays a central role in processing threat-related stimuli. It is critical for fear conditioning, where a neutral stimulus becomes associated with an aversive event, triggering a fear response. This function is supported by evidence that electrical stimulation of the right amygdala induces fear and sadness, while damage to this region impairs the ability to recognize or respond to fearful faces and emotional threats.

Because there's layers to consciousness, dreaming (nightmares, wet dreams), lucid dreaming (walking around, conversations, music, touch), reality shifting (ayyiliums, demons, ghosts), and astral projection (OoBe, weightlessness, and touch, or sight <- pcg and robo make you remote control your body)

Dreaming and lucid dreaming is the ambiguously gay duo lemma of mine, that the brains are communicating spatially independently through a form of Acetylcholine in the pons.

Reality shifting means you will run into monsters and madmen (i.e accidentally teleporting into a reconstructed hell/sleep paralysis) They can harm you psychosomatically, not only do you die, you wake up tasting blood or another residual sense like acid or odor.

Astral projection is just good reality shifting where you are in a safe space and weightless with your shapeshifted body

Cynicism is the primary reason why dreams or the subconscious sucks, cause it tries to make dreams that have negative qualia associated with your cynicisms of the outside world, such as the world is ideally evil.

Cynicism is learned by experience, I learn that the world is hell from being abused by it. Even if there are "layers" to consciousness" when reality becomes centred around others instead of me its no longer a layer of "MY" consciousness, my "consciousness" is inherently fundamentally centred around my subjective perspective, once other people become more important/central than me in my own life/reality then you can't say they're a "layer of my consciousness" anymore, they're a different consciousness centred around a different subjective perspective.

You are correct. The tesseract is the key to visualizing how consciousness itself works. The inner cube is energy passing through the pineal gland. The outer cube is the world surrounding you. As the outer cube moves to the center (the pineal gland) it "spheres the cube" which is a higher dimensional version of circling the square. The pineal gland pulses energy (sphering) which imprints on the cube. This now "imprinted" cube moves outward and around you creating your toroidal field. Kind of like turning your shirt inside out. The imprinted cube moves, turning inside out and surrounding you. Your pineal gland creates your world by either acting or reacting to the world that your bodies 5 senses observe. Positive energy means you're creating the world around you. Negative energy and you're reacting to the world around you. The tesseract moves in one direction or another depending on the energies that the pineal gland imprints. As above so below. As within so without.

believe it or not, there are actually "Christians" out there who do not believe that demons exist and just think the whole implication surrounding them and their mentions is just some kind of "metaphor" for things like negative feelings such as fear or anxiety and whatnot. like, they're just "personifications" or said negative emotions, and not literal evil spiritual beings that prey upon them.

i've had different instances of being demonically oppressed ever since i gave my life to Christ, and i came to realize more and more that they are actually real and hate us so badly, it's nearly unconceivable. good thing though is that i've slowly learnt that the way to combat them is to literally just rebuke the negative or lustful thoughts they attempt to put into your head then command them to leave you alone in the name of Jesus Christ.

i used to think it's a bit silly to do at first, especially since the world conditions you to think it's "schizophrenic" or whatever to do that, but it genuinely works. especially if you speak it out in actual confidence and authority, not just saying it while doubting whether it will work or not, say it loud while clearly expecting it to work, and it will actually work. the demons will be forced to actually depart. they may come again at some point, but you can repel them back by commanding them to leave in the name of Jesus Christ who gave you the authority to do so and cast them out in His name in the first place.

If they had accepted what scripture clearly and plainly teaches, they'd have understood the Lord Jesus Christ wasn't casting metaphors out of people.

That being said, virtually all of what goes on out there that people get to watch on youtube concerning exorcisms is larp, and you can tell right away because in reality demons couldn't give a rat's ass about catholic mythology icons, but somehow they all seem to be scared of dead women and anal beads.

Above the crowd, there are two blue arrows pointing towards the figure on the cross, indicating a focus on this central figure. The background of the image features a landscape with a castle and trees, suggesting a historical or medieval setting.

At the bottom of the image, there is a text overlay that reads, "Instead of worshipping Gods, Christians worship a fragmented fictional converted pedophile that was prescribed to them by people who hate them." This text suggests a commentary on the religious practices of Christians and the potential negative impact of their faith on society.

The style of the image is realistic with a focus on the details of the figures and the landscape, and it uses a color palette that includes warm tones for the figures and a cooler tone for the background. The overall composition and the use of text overlay emphasize the religious and historical context of the scene.

Demons aren't real and neither is God but this logic is always hilarious. "I converted and my life got worse in every way, time to spread the word!" See, this about the conflict between delusional deontology (the ethical idea that certain things are always good and bad) and based utilitarianism (the idea that things are made good and bad by how much suffering or happiness they create.) The fact that worshipping a God who fails to protect you from demons is straight simp behavior never crosses the minds of Christians, because they define "serving god" as good even when it hurts everyone involved for some reason.

The issue with utilitarianism is that it is closely associated with the following four ideas:

1. souls do not exist
2. qualia are an after-effect of mental processing with no causal powers whatsoever
3. pleasure is some sort of post-processing effect rather than true enjoyment of the sensation itself
4. pleasure and pain can be projected onto a one-dimensional axis as a scalar value with only a single degree of freedom. By extension, this also applies to moral value, or "utility".

These assumptions seem innocent but have absolutely devastating moral implications if you actually try to follow them to their final conclusion. I'm not going to elaborate further because there are certain concepts I don't want to spread around, even just to criticize them, but I will say that I legitimately consider naive utilitarianism to be characteristically Luciferian. And I say that as someone who is decidedly not a Christian.

Curses are stupid mode. You will get hit with nasty energy and tons of bad effects all because you let someone else live rent free in your head instead of moving on. You know what would really piss them off? Living well. Plus blessing and uplifting yourself doesn't have any nasty side effects. You might even clear out any crap others flung at you, so they get to see you do well while suffering because they tried to cuse you.

Curses are that easy to override. Cleanse, ward, bless, repeat. But the stink that sticks when you curse others is hard to remove and can attract more badness your way.

Cursing is not worth it.

This is really easy to test. Just use a protection spell on someone and have them put their hand into a fire. If they get burned, the ritual didn't work.

>If you need to cast away evil, use rites to drive evil away from her.

"Evil" is vague and subjective so you can claim credit for literally any good luck the target has with this one.

>If you need someone healed, use healing rites or petition gods of healing.

Another easy test. Have your friend drink bleach and then use your healing ritual. If they still need a doctor, the ritual didn't work.

>Wrecking yourself will only hurt you and make people who care about you hurt, too.

This is totally unrelated to my point.

Classic option is hotfoot powder. You can make it with hot pepper, black pepper and a bit of charcoal dust. It's a repellent, not a curse. Sprinkle it where the target goes (and you don't want them) and say that you want them to go away.

Better yet: talk to the person in danger. Explain your concerns and bring evidence why they need to avoid the person. It'll help them see the red flags.

A tip when seeking guides: avoid people trying to sell stuff and focus on what makes sense. Also look at several guides and see what you can find. > Add details as needed > write the bad person name on the paper in red ink > burn the paper with the candle, toss paper in sink > say "As this paper burns, may (name) be burned out of (name)'s life"

> Let paper burn out

> Rinse ashes down sink

> Say "As water purifies, let (name) leave no trace."

> Pray whatever you feel is right

> Give thanks

> blow out candle

> Cleanse self again

You can't force people to do things even with curses. This should help grant understanding. If you need more help you can always ask God what to do.

Urban Legends - The Gallows Man Anonymous Fri 13 Feb 2026 18:07:10 No.41966898

"The Gallows Man is coming,

The Gallows Man is coming.
If you see him on the road,
You better start running."

This little rhyme was one I heard a lot as kid growing up as a kid in tiny little part of western NC. I've heard several explanations regarding the origin of the rhyme but I can't corroborate or find any real world references to any of these stories. So, clearly just an urban legend but I think folk stories are neat which is why I'm sharing this with you /x/.

All versions of the story revolve around a vigilante type character called, the "Gallows Man". The Gallows Man works to punish corrupt individuals, usually a business man or politician. The form of punishment is death by hanging - thus the name. Though, typically the victim is haunted by dreams and visions of nooses and hanged men in trees prior to their ultimate demise (theres never an actual gallows the victim is always found in a tree or in their home hanging).

The events described in these urban legends alway occur in the past. Some are from the late-1800s and depict the corruption of textile mill owners and their ultimate fate. I've heard a version about a greedy businessman while was basically acting as a loan shark. My favorite was about a pastor who killed his daughter's lover.

Apparently my post is too long so I'll continue story in the next post.
